RITA, pres. rit, ritr, ritr; pret. reit, the 2nd pers. does not occur; pl. ritu; subj. riti; imperat. rit; part. ritinn; the earliest writers use the strong conjugation; thus in the treatise of Thorodd, ek rit, 165, l. 26, 166, ll. 22-24, 168, l. 10; rit'k = rit ek, 166, l. 36; þú ritir, 161, l. 2 from the bottom, 168, l. 19; ek reit, 168, l. 4; part. ritinn, ritin, ritnum, 161, 168-168: in the other instances the weak form seems merely due to the transcriber of the Cod. Worm. of the 14th century, and the old forms ought to be restored; thus, pres. ritar, 160, l. 3 from the bottom, 165, l. 1; pret. ritaða, ritaðir, 164, l. 31; part. ritað, ll. 3, 32, etc.; infin. rita for ríta, l. 3; Ari also uses the strong form, lb. 4, Hkr. i. 48: in the pref. to Landn. for ritað read ritið (?); reit, Hkr. iii. 347. In writers of later times, as also in later transcripts of old writers, the weak form (ek rita, ritar, ritar, ritaða, ritað) prevails; thus in the pref. to Ó. II., pres. rita (once), pret. ritaða (five times), ritaði, 248; ritaðar and rituðu, Sturl. i. 107, Fms. x. 371; ritað, Knytl. S. ch. i. 21, 95, Hungtv. ch. 1; and so on: the part. ritinn remained longest, thus, eptir sögu þjóðólfs var fyrst ritinn mál Ynglinga, Hkr. Friðsb. (pref.), Fms. vii. 156, Grág. i. 76, Symb. (fine). The Norse vellums seem to know the weak form only, e. g. ritaði, Sks. 563 B. The root to this word is well known in the Scand. languages in derived words, as reitr, reita, rít (q. v.), yet the verb itself, at least in the sense 'to write,' seems to have been adopted from the A. S., as it nowhere occurs on the Runic stones or in old poets, and always means writing on parchment, ríta being used of writing on stone; the original form is vríta: [A. S. veritan; Engl. to write; Germ. reissen; O. H. G. rizan = to scratch; Scot. rit or ret; cp. also Ulf. vríta = aspala, Luke xvi. 17.]

Fas. i. 58. rúm-ligr, adj. roomy, ample, wide, Sks. 403. rúmr, adj., compar. rýmri, superl. rýmstr, [Ulf. rums = εὐρύχωρος; Shetl. room]:—roomy, ample, spacious; konungs garðr er rúmr innugangr, opp. to þröngr, Eg. 519; gatan var eigi rýmri (broader) en einu maðr mátti ríða senn, Fms. viii. 81; rúmr vegr, Barl. 70, opp. to þröngr vegr; Vandráðr stýrði þar sem þeim þótti rýmst milli skipanna, Fms. vi. 321; ok senn hann er lauss þykkir honum skör rýmra, Fas. ii. 225; til þess ens góða ok rúma lands, Stj.:—roomy, loose, fjöturinn var rúmr, Fms. vi. 15; as also of clothes:—neut., flestum var þar fyrðum rúmt, ample room for all, Vols. R. 13; skipin lágu rúmt í höfuinni, Fas. ii. 522:—adv., rúmt fim-tigi, fifty and upwards, D. N. iv. 141; rúmt hálfan setta tug, i. 168. rúm-anara, u, f. a slip-knot (mod. kappmella), Karl. 161, Fms. v. 288, Sd. 169, Mar. rúm-ami, n. (mod. rúm-aför, m.), the open sea, Grett. 83 A. RÚN, f., pl. rúnar: [rún, raun, meaning to enquire, may be presumed; the original notion is scrutiny, mystery, secret conversation; Goth. runa, by which Ulf. several times renders the Gr. μυστήριον and συμβόλιον (once, Matth. xxvii. 1), βουλή (twice, Luke vii. 30, 1 Cor. iv. 5); A. S. rūn = a 'roaming' mystery, but also = writing, charter; Hel. rūna = colloquium, and geruni = loquela (Schmeller); cp. Old Engl. to roven, Germ. raunen; Gr. ῥ-περδω is also supposed to be a kindred word (Bugge). In Scand. writers and poets rún is chiefly used of magical characters, then of writing, whereas the derivative word raun means trial, enquiry, and rúni and rúna = a friend or counsellor.]

B. A secret, hidden lore, mystery; frá jötna rúnum ok alra goda segðu it sannasta, Vpm. 42, 43; kenna rúnar, to teach wisdom, Rm. 33; dæma um rúnar ok regin-dóma, Hm. 112; minnask á fornar rúnar, Vsp. 59; sattu, segja sannar rúnir, to tell true saws, Fas. ii. 302 (in a verse); a 'roaming' speech, vífs rúnir, a woman's whispering, Bm.; heita e-n at rúnum, to consult one, Gh. 12, Skv. 3. 14, 43; hniga at rúnum, Gkv. 3. 4. II. A Rune or written character; the earliest Runes were not writing in proper sense, but fanciful signs possessing a magical power; such Runes have, through vulgar superstition, been handed down even to the present time, for a specimen of them see Ísl. þjóða. i. 435, 436, and Arna-Magn. Nos. 687, 4to, and 434. 12mo (Ísl. þjóða. pref. ix); the classical passages for these spell-Runes are, Hm. 133 sqq., Sdm. 5 sqq., Skm. 29, 36, Eg. ch. 44, 61, 75, Yngl. S. ch. 7, Grett. ch. 85, N. G. L. iii. 286, 300, Vsp. 59; cp. also the phrase, rísta trénið, Grág., Fs. 56. The phrase in the old Danish Ballads, kaste runer, to throw Runes, i. e. chips (see hlaut, hlautviðr), may be compared to the Lat. sortes, Mommsen's Hist. of Rome, vol. i. p. 187, foot-note (Engl. Ed.), or the Sibylline leaves in the Aeneid. 2. Runes as writing; the word was first applied to the original Northern alphabet, which at an early time was derived from the common Phœnician, probably through Greek or Roman coins in the first centuries of our era. From these Runes were subsequently formed two alphabets, the old Scandinavian (whence again the Anglo-Saxon), as found on the Golden horn and the stone in Tune, and the later Scandinavian, in which the inscriptions in the greater number of the Swedish and Danish stone monuments are written, most being of the 10th (9th?) and following centuries.—A curious instance of the employment of Runes is their being written on a kefi (a round piece of wood) as messages (cp. the Gr. σφαιράκιον), as is freq. recorded in the Sagas, e.g. Gial. 45, 67, Fms. ix. 390, 490, Grett. 154 new Ed., Fb. i. 251 (of the deaf and dumb Oddný). It is doubtful whether poems were ever written in this way, for almost the only authority for such a statement is Eg. 605, where we read that the Sonatorrek was taken down on a Runic stick, the other instances being mostly from romances or fabulous Sagas, Grett. 144. Orvar Oddi S. (Áne). This writing on a kefi is mentioned in the Latin line, Barbara 'fraxineis' sculpatur runa 'tabellis,' Capella (5th century). In later times (from the 13th century) Runic writing was practised as a sort of curiosity; thus calendars used to be written on sticks, of which there is a specimen in the Bodl. Library in Oxford; they were also used for inscriptions on tombstones, spoons, chairs, and the like; there even exists in the Arna-Magn. Library a Runic MS. of an old Danish law, and there is a Runic letter in Sturl. (of the year 1241); Runes carved on an oar occur in Fs. 177: a hidden treasure in a chest is labelled with Runes, Fms. vi. 271, Sd. 146, cp. also the interesting record in Bs. i. 435 (sex manna bein vóru þar hjá honum ok vax ok rúnar þar er sögðu atburð lífiáts þeirra).

3. the word rún is also, though rarely, applied to the Latin alphabet; ef hann er á þingi þá skal hann rísta nafn hans ef hann kann rúnar, N. G. L. i. 175; or generally, taki ek eigi hvárt þú ritir þitt eðr o, e eða a, f eða e, y eða u, en ek svara svá, eigi er þat rúnanna kostur þó at þú lesir vel eða ráðir vel at líkindum, þar sem rúnar vísa óskirt, heldr er þat þinn kostur, Thorodd 162; þessi er upphaf allra háttu svá sem málrúnar eru fyrir öðrum rúnum, Edda (Ht.) 121.

rún-henda, u, f., or rún-hending, f., is the name of the metre with end-rhymes, consecutive, not alternate; the word is now obsolete, and in ancient writers it only occurs in two places, the Ht. R. verse 24 and in Edda (Ht.), where the Cod. Reg. gives rún-, Edda i. 606 sqq. (the foot-notes); but one is tempted to suspect that this is corrupt, and that the true form was rím-, as im and un can hardly be distinguished in MSS.; rím- would yield good sense, whereas rún- is meaningless. The metre itself is evidently of foreign origin, borrowed from the A. S.; the first poem in this metre was the Hofuðl. of Egil, who had lived in England; it was little used throughout the 10th and the following centuries, and the few poems and fragments composed in it can be traced to Egil's poem as their prototype. The single verse in Eg. ch. 27 is prob. a later composition.

rasta-fullr, adj. full of currents, Skv. 223.

RÖST, f., gen. rastar, pl. rastir, [different from the preceding; Ulf. rasta = mulso, Matth. v. 41; A. S. and Engl. rest; O. H. G. rasa; Germ. rast]:—prop. rest, but used only in the metaph. sense of a mile, i. e. the distance between two 'resting-places,' or 'baiting' points: distances on land were counted by rasts, on sea by vika, which seem to have been of equal length, thus in the old Swed. law, rost at landi, vika at vatni, Schlyter. The ancient Scandinavian rast seems to have answered to the modern geographical mile, which agrees with the Latin mille only in name, its actual distance being that of the rast, not the Roman mille passus. The distances were not measured, but roughly guessed, and varied (like the Swiss stunde) according to the nature of the ground traversed, the rasts through mountains or deserts being shorter than those in an inhabited district; hence such phrases as, þat eru langar tvær rastir, it is two long rasts, Fms. ix. 393; þeir söttu svá hart þessa eyðimörk, at skammar voru þá þrettán rastir eptir, thirteen short rasts, viii. 33: the following instances may serve, in Norway the distance from Oslo (the present Christiania) to Eidsvold was counted at eight 'rasts,' ix. 376; þeir fóruð svá nær at eigi var lengra til en röst, 371; þeir ríða síðan átta rastir . . . þrjár vikur eptir vötnum, 376; ríðu þeir nokkura hálfa röst, 423; þat var eina nótt, at eigi var lengra milli náttstaða þeirra en röst, viii. 63; rastar langr, ix. 394, 402; rastar-djúpr, Hým.: of the old forests, Eidda-skógr er tólli rasta langr, Fms. ix. 354; skógr tólf rasta langr, . . . þann skógr er áttján rasta var yfir, viii. 30, 31; sá skógr er Tvíviðr heitir, hann er tólf rasta breiddr, Rb. 332; fjogurra rasta ok tuttugu, Gullþ. 52:—six 'rasts' done afoot in one night is recorded as something extraordinary, Ólafí komi njósnin um kveldit, en þeir gengu um nóttina sex rastir ok þótti mönnum þat furdumikil farit, þeir komu á Ryðjökul um óttu-söng, Fms. vii. 317; átta röstum, þkv.: an immense distance is given at 'a hundred rasts,' hundrað rasta á hverjan veg, Vpm. (Eidda 41); hundrað rasta heyrði smelli, Skíða R. 150; heim-röst, a homestead; út-röst, the outskirts.

rösuðr, m. one who emits; reysk r., poet. 'reek-vomiter,' i. e. fire, Yt.

rösuill, adj. [rasa], apt to stumble, of a horse.

S (ess), the eighteenth letter, was, in the old Runes, on the stone in Tune, and the Golden horn, figured Σ ; in the common Runes h ; in the latest Runic inscriptions (12th and following centuries) l or b . Its name was 'Sól' (Sua)—Sól er landa ljómi, in the Runic poem; the h was specially, from its form, called the 'kné-sól' (knee-sun).

B. PRONUNCIATION, CHANGES.—Sounded sharper than in English. The s is in mod. Icel. pronunciation the only sibilant sound; in olden times s and z were distinguished in sound as well as in writing, but afterwards the z sound was lost or assimilated with s.

II. CHANGES: s into r, as vera, var, er, for vesa, vas, es; as also the particle es for er; Gothic s into Scandinavian r in the words, Goth. bausan, auso, = Icel. heyra, eyra; the inflex. Goth. -s into Scandin. -r: an assimilation has taken place in such words as laus-s, is-r, for laus-r, is-r; again, in vellums, as for s in such forms as búss (gen.) from bú, nýss = nýs, hirsiss = hirsis (gen.); in mod. usage this inflexive s is dropped in sound and spelling, laus, is: the ancients, on the other hand, said vissa, vissi, mod. visra, vissri (sapientum, sapienti):—sn is sounded stn, stndu, stndri, stndggr, stndjör . . . = snúða, snóri, snöggr, snjör . . . and thus spelt in some Norse vellums (e. g. the Barl.): here come in also such forms as laustn, njostn, ristna, = lausn, njösn, risna, reistn and reisin, O. H. L. (pref.) ix; so also the forms Ást-ríðr, Ást-leifr, Ást-lákr (see the remarks s. v. ást), = Ás-ríðr . . . Ás-lákr, Baut.

2. skt = sl, thus sklakka = slakka, D. I. i. 180, l. 10, but rare: cp. the Germ. spelling schl = Icel. and Engl. sl (Germ. schlagen = Icel. slá); as also the Fr. esclave and slave.

3. sk corrupted into skr, skokkr, skykkjum, and skrokkr, skrykkjótt; analogous are Icel. skjallr, Engl. skril:—sk for s, in sjaldan and skjaldan, Icel. saur-lá, Dan. skor-leved.

4. sk answers to Engl. sk (skip, fiskr, = Engl. ship, fish), except in a few words, as Engl. skin, score, which may be borrowed from the Norse. 6. There are more words beginning with s than with any other letter of the alphabet; this is due to the combination of st, sm, sp, and st.

SADDE, part., older form sadr, Hým. 1, which answers to the Goth. and Lat., [Ulf. saps, Luke vi. 25, xv. 16; O. H. G. sat; Lat. satur; see sedja]:—sated, having got one's fill, Hým. 1; vera s. á e-u, Ld. 98; s. e-s, Hbl. 3; s. lifdaga, full of days, Bible; hálf-s., half sated.

SAFI, a. m. [Engl. sap; Germ. safft], the sap of trees (the juice of berries is called logr, q. v.); bóktr af viði ok safi, Fms. viii. 32; þeir áttu safu okugu birki-við, 33; ber ok safu, Fas. iii. 208, passim.

safn, n. a collection, Vm. 6, 15, passim in mod. usage.

sag, n. sawedust:—sawing, keppa sag, Skíða R.

saga, ad, to saw, cut with a saw, Barl. 166, Fms. vii. 89.

SAGA, u. f., gen. sögu, pl. sögur; gen. pl. sagna is rare; and in compds the gen. sing. sögu is preferred, thus sögu-bók, sögu-fróðr, where sögu is used in a collective sense; when gen. sagna is used it is often to be regarded as borrowed from sögu, as in sagna-fróðr, sagna-meistari; sagna from saga, however, occurs in dæmi-sagna, Stj. 560; Orkneyinga-sagna, O. H. 90, l. 3 from the bottom: [from segja; cp. Engl. saw; Germ. sage.]

B. A story, tale, legend, history. The very word owes its origin to the fact that the first historical writings were founded on tradition only; the written record was a 'saga' or legend committed to writing; the story thus written was not even new, but had already taken shape and had been told to many generations under the same name; hence the written history and the story told were both alike called Saga, just as in Gr. both were called λόγος (Herod. i. 184, ii. 161, vi. 19). In some instances when history is mentioned by name it is difficult to say whether a told or written Saga be meant; the former seems to be the case, esp. in the Landnámia—þar hefsk saga Harðar Grímkels-sonar ok Geirs, Landn. 62; þar góðisk saga þeirra Þorbjarnar ok Hávarðar ens halta, 127; Vébjörn var víga-maðr mikill, ok er saga mikil frá honum, 150; þar af góðisk saga Lsfríðinga ok víg Þorbjarnar, id.; þar af góðisk saga Bódmóðs gæpiss ok Grímolfs, 157; þar af góðisk Svarfíðla saga, 208; þar af góðisk Þorskríðinga saga, 124; ok þar var þóðrðr gellir leiddr í áðr hann tók manuvirðing, sem segir í sögu hans, 111. Some of these Sagas were perhaps never committed to writing; others not till a later date, when the tradition had deteriorated; but they were told and known by name at the time when the Landn. was first composed, see Safn i. 191. Written Sagas, again, are those recorded in later works,—ok geir hans í Laxdæla sögu, Eb. 334; sem segir í sögu Laxdæla, Grett. 13; sem segir í Bandamanna sögu, 22; visar svá til í sögu Bjarnar, 132; sem segir í sögu Njardvika, Ld. 296; sem í sögu Þorgils Hólmu-sonar segir, 290; sem segir í Eyrbýggja sögu, Landn. G. L. i. 21, 359 (else the Grág. has útlagr, q. v.). II. in Icel. law, convicted, outlawed, condemned to the lesser or greater outlawry; nú verðr maðr sekr at sátt, en þá verðr maðr sekr at sátt, er hann handsalar sekr: sína, Grág. (Kb.) ch. 60; sekr skógar-maðr, sekr fjörbaugs-maðr, Grág.; til ek hann eiga at verða um þú sok sekjan skógarmann, prop. = a convicted woodman, Nj. 110; maðr hafði sekr orðit um þrjár mörð eðr leysinga, lb. 6; but also used singly, ins sekja manns, the outlaw, Grág. i. 360; Gisl verðr sekr, Gisl. 39; verða sekr um vig, Nj. 88, Gret.

seklum mönnum lílar atferðir, MS. 677. 4; láta þann undan setja er sekt er, Nj. 136; eigi gæra verkin ein saman manninn sekjan, 656 A. ii. 16; þar til er þeir fara af heiminum sektir, 625. 66; sekari né dauðlegri, Sks. 533; samt fyrir Guði sekt er, Pass., N. T., Vidal. passim.

sekt, f.; in the Grág., esp. Kb., the older form sekd or sekp prevails; in Kb. ch. 60, sekt occurs nine times, sekd or sekp seventeen times:—a penalty, fine, mulct; varðar búanda þat þriggja marka sekt, Grág. i. 158; ef maðr handalsar manni ákveðna sekt sína, 119.

II. as an Icel. law term, the condition is one of the three degrees of outlawry or lög-sekt,—thus defined, þær eru lögsæðir þrjár á landi vóru, ef maðr er görr skógar-maðr úferjandi, eða fjorbaugs-maðr, en sú en þrjúja at auka svá fjorbaugs-sekd, at hann skyli eigi eiga fætt út hingat, Grág. i. 119; yet, as a rule, only the first two degrees appear in the Sagas; sekt is opp. to sætt, Fs. 73; lýsa til fullrar sektar, Nj.:—hence the outlawry itself, Grág., Nj.; hann (Grettir) var lengst í sekt, Grett. (fine); þótti sumum sem hann hefði úti sekt sína ef hann hafði nokkut af hinu tuttugasta ári, 149. This clause about the twenty years is nowhere mentioned in the Grágas, and seems to be a mere popular fiction in the Grett. S., cp. also Gisl. 126 and Harðar S. ad fin.

SKÁLD, n., pl. skáld; the word is in poetry rhymed as skald (with a short vowel), skald and kálda, aldri and skaldi, Kormak, and so on; but the plural is always speit skáld, not sköld; the mod. Dan. skjald is borrowed from the Icel.: [the etymology and origin of this word is contested; Prof. Bergmann, in Message de Skirnir, Strasbourg, 1871, p. 54, derives it from the Slavonic skladi=composition, skladaez=compositor; but the earliest usages point to a Teutonic and a different root. In the ancient law skáldskapr meant a libel in verse, and was synonymous with flimt, danz, nið, q. v.; the compds skáld-flit, leir-skáld (q. v.) also point to the bad sense as the original one, which is still noticeable in popular Icel. usages and phrases such as skálda (the verb), skáldi, skáldinn (libellous), see also skáldmætr below. On the other hand, skálda, Germ. schalte, means a pole (see skálda, skáld-stöng below); libels and imprecations were in the ancient heathen age scratched on poles, see the remarks s. v. nið, niðstöng. The word is therefore, we believe, to be traced back to the old libel-pole, 'scald-pole'; if so, Engl. scold=to abuse, Germ. schelten, may be kindred words; the old Lat. phrase (of Mart. Capella) barbara fraseineis sculptur ruma tabellis may even refer to this scratching of imprecations on pieces of wood.]

skálda-spillir, m. 'skald-spoiler,' the nickname of the poet Eyvind; the name was, we believe, a bye-word, a 'poetaster,' 'plagiarist'; we believe that this nickname was given to this poet because two of his chief poems were modelled after other works of contemporary poets, the Háleygja-tal after the Ynglinga-tal, and the Hákonar-mál after the Eiríks-mál; (as to the latter poem this is even expressly stated in Fagrsk. 22); the word would thus be the same as ill-skálda, a word applied to a poet for having borrowed the refrain of his poem, Fms. iii. 65. Skálda-tal, n. a List of Poets, a short treatise affixed to the Cod. Ups. of the Edda and the Cod. Acad. primus of the Heimskringla.

skáld-kona, u, f. a 'skald-queen,' a poetess, a nickname of a woman, for which the reason given is this; hann átti Þórhildi skáldkonu, 'hón var orðgrífr mikít ok fór með flimtan,' she was a 'word-witch,' and made libels, Nj. 49.

skáld-skapr, m. 'scaldship,' poetry: I. a libel in verse; eigi skal lýsa legorðs-sök um skáldskap, Grág. i. 351; ef maðr kveðr skáldskap til háðungar manni, . . . ok varðar þat skóggang, skal sækja sem annan skáldskap, ii. 151, see the whole chapter in Kb. ch. 238, inscribed, um Skáldskap, of Libels; the word is therefore used synonymously with danz and flimt, nið, q. v. II. poetry in a good sense, Edda passim; Sighvatr var ekki hrað-mæltr maðr í sundr-lausum orðum, en s. var honum svá tiltækr, at hann kvað af tungu fram svá sem hann mælti annat mál, Ó. H. 171; ok kom þar brátt talinu at þeir ræddu um skáldskap, þótti hvarum-veggja þær ræður skemtiligar, Eg. 686; skáldskapar grein, -háttir, poetical metre, Skálda 183, 210; skáldskapar laun = skáldfé, Eg. 152.

Skáld-skapar-mál, n. pl. poetical diction, Edda 49, Skálda 195; hence the name of the second part of the Edda, the ancient Ars Poetica, containing the rules and laws of ancient poetry. Sk. Skáldskapr in old writers refers to the 'form' (metre, flow, diction), not to the contents; even in such phrases as, ekki var mikill skáldskapr í því kvæði, there was not much 'scaldship' in that poem, it was a bad composition, Fms. vii. 38.

skáld-stöng, f. a 'libel-pole,' a pole with imprecations or charms scratched on it; ef maðr reisir stöng ok kallar s., þá hefir hann fyrir-gört hverjum penningi fjár síns, N. G. L. i. 430.

skjaldar-sporðr, m. the 'shield-tail,' the lower part of an oblong shield, Ld. 78, Glúm. 333, Fas. i. 515.

B. Remarks on the shield.—A shield was raised as a signal in time of war; a red shield betokened war (raudr skjöldr, her-skjöldr), a white shield peace (hvitr skjöldr, friðar-skjöldr, a peace-shield); in a battle the red shield was hoisted, Hkr. i. 33; but, bregða upp friðar skildi, to hoist the (white) shield of peace, was a sign that the battle was to cease; hann lét skjóta upp skildi hvítum, Fagrsk. 61, Fms. vii. 23; hence also the phrase, bera herskjöld, or, fara herskildi, to carry, overrun a land with the 'war shield,' see frið-skjöldr and her-skjöldr (s. v. herr). War ships were lined from stem to stern with a wall of shields,—skip skarar skjöldum, or skjaldat skip; hann kom í Bjarnar-fjörð með al-skjölduðu skipi, síðan var hann Skjaldar-Björn kallaðr, Landn. 156. The halls of the ancients were hung all round with a row of shields, Gm. 9, Edda 2, Eg. 43, see the curious story in Fas. iii. 42. For the shield-wall in battles see skjald-borg. Ancient sayings; nú er skarð fyrir skildi, now there is a gap for a shield, a breach in the fence, of a heavy loss, such as the death of a person, nú er skarð fyrir skildi, nú er svanrinn nár á Tjörn, Jón Þorl.; höggva skarð í skildi e-s, to cut a notch in one's shield, inflict a severe blow, Orkn. (in a verse). Shields were furnished with a painted or carved 'ring' representing mythological or heroic subjects; these rings are the earliest works of Northern art on record, hence come the names rit, baugr, rönd, of which rit points to scratching (whereas Bragi used 'fa' = to paint); raudum skildi, rönd var ör gulli, Hkr. i. 33. Such shields were a lordly gift, and gave rise to several ancient poems treating of the subjects carved or painted on the shield, such as the famous Haust-löng by Thiodolf, the Ragnars-kvæði by Bragi, the two Beru-drápur (Shield-songs) by Egill; these 'shield-lays' were afterwards the sources of the writer of the Edda, but only a few fragments are preserved; (cp. the Greek lay on 'the shield of Heracles,' and the lay on Achilles' shield in the Iliad.)

Skjöldungar, m. pl. the famous lineage of the kings of Denmark, from Skjöld, the son of Óðin, Edda, Yngl. S. The Danish legend derives the name from his being found in infancy in a bed of reeds to which he had floated on a shield; but in fact the name is derived from the ancient Teutonic custom of electing the king by lifting him on a shield in the assembly.

SÓA, að; this heathen word remains in only four passages of the old poems Hm. and Yt., and in those only in the infin. and part. sóit; from these, however, a strong inflexion may be inferred; in mod. usage (in sense II) it is a verb of the 1st weak conjugation (að): [the etymology is doubtful; not from sá = to see; it is more likely that sóa is the root word to són, an atonement. The passages in Hm. and Yt. leave no doubt as to the original sense]:—to sacrifice, make an offering, but in a specific sense, for Hm. makes a distinction between blóta and sóa; veisti hve blóta skal ... veiztu hve sóa skal ... betra er ósent en sé of sóit, Hm. 145, 146; þá er árgjörmi Jóta dólgi Svía kind um sóa skyldi, Yt. 5 (where the prose is, at þeir skyldi honum 'blóta' til árs sér); at Bólverki þeir spurðu ef hann væri með böndum kominn eðr heði honum Suttange um sóit, or if S. had sacrificed him, put him to death, Hm. 109. II. in mod. usage the word is freq. in the sense to squander, with dat.

 átti, Luke xv. 14; cp. Lat. dapes, an offering, and Gr. δωρεον, a

So in Icel. at the present day children, immediately after getting out of bed in the morning, are made to run out of doors bare-headed, there to say a short prayer or verse, and when they return 'bid good-day,'—a 'good-day' being not allowable till this is done; this is called to 'fetch the good-morning,' sækja góðan-daginn; the verse Pass. 3. 12 is set apart for this use; but the very words of this verse—á morni hverjum þá upp stend eg, fyrst eg stig niðr fæti á jörð, færi eg þér hjartans þakkar-görð—were evidently suggested to the poet's mind by this beautiful and time-honoured custom then general, but now perhaps fast dying out.

The ancient sacrifice of atonement (sónar-blót) was thus performed:—the largest boar that could be found in the kingdom was on Yule-eve led before the king and his men assembled in the hall; the king and his men then laid their hands on the boar's bristly mane and made a solemn vow, strengja heit at Braga-fulli. The animal being sacrificed, divination took place, probably by chips shaken in the boar's blood; for descriptions see Herv. S. ch. 10 (Fas. i. 531, 532), Hkr. Hjörv. (the prose), Yngl. S. ch. 21 (ganga til sónar-blóts til fréttar). The boar's head at Yule-tide in Queen's College, Oxford, is probably a relic of this ancient heathen sacrificial rite.

The word is no doubt borrowed from the Latin, for as the old Northmen and Teutons had no towns, they had no streets; it is therefore strange to find such a word in an old poem like Hdm. 13, (the passage is prob. corrupt); so also, einn dag var þat er Kormakr gekk um stræti, Korm. 228, referring to the middle of the 10th century; but as the Saga is of the 11th, the words may perhaps here too be taken as an anachronism; Ólafr konungr gekk einn dag úti á stræti, Fa. 115, referring to Niðarós of the year 996; since in the 11th, and esp. in the 12th and 13th centuries, the word becomes freq. in Sagas referring to Norway, but never to Icel., Fms. vi. 363, vii. 39, Blas. 40. In the old Norse market-towns of the 11th, 12th, and following centuries, the 'street' ran along the shore (bryggjur), with 'scores' or cross lanes (veitur or almenningar) leading up to the houses (garðar), N. SUMAR, n., dat. sumri; pl. sumur; sumra, sumrum; in the old language this word was masculine in the form sumarr, of which gender a trace may still be seen in the contracted forms sumri, sumra, sumrum, for a genuine neuter does not admit these contractions. But there remains a single instance of the actual use of the masculine in the rhyme of a verse of the beginning of the 21th century, sumar hvern frekum erni, Skálda,—from which one might infer that at that time the word was still masc.; if so, it is not likely that in a poem so old as the Vsp. it would be neuter, and 'sumur' in 'of sumur eptir' perhaps ought to be corrected 'sumra' or 'sumar' (acc. sing.); as also 'varmt sumar' should be 'varmr sumarr', Vpm. 26: [A. S. sumar; a word common to all Teut. languages; in the Orm. sumarr, denoting a long w; the mod. Dan., Germ., and Engl. have summer, summer, with a double m]:—a summer, passim.

II. mythical, Sumarr, the son of Svásar, Edda 13.

B. CHRONOLOGICAL REMARKS.—The old Northmen, like the Icel. of the present time, divided the year into two halves, summer and winter; the summer began on the Thursday next before the 16th of April in the old calendar, which answers to the 26th of the Gregorian calendar (used in Icel. since A. D. 1700). The Northern and Icelandic summer is therefore a fixed term in the calendar, and consists of 184 days, viz. six months of thirty days, plus four days, called aukanættir ('eve-nights'). Summer is divided into two halves, each of three months (=ninety days), before and after midsummer (mið-sumar); and the four 'eve-nights' are every summer intercalated immediately before midsummer; thus in the Icel. Almanack of 1872—Sumar-dag fyrsti, or the first summer-day, falls on Thursday the 25th of April; Auka-nætr from the 24th to the 27th of July; Mið-súmar on the 28th of July; Sumar-dagr síðasti, or the last day of summer, on the 25th of October; cp. sumarnátt síðasta, Gisl. 67. In mod. usage the time from April to October is counted by the summer weeks, the first, second, ... twentieth ... week of the summer, and in Icel. Almanacks every Thursday during summer is marked by the running number of the week. The ancients, too, counted the summer by weeks, but only down to midsummer, thus, tíu vikur skulu vera af sumri er menn koma til alþingis, K. þ. K. 166; but in the latter part of the summer they counted either by the weeks from midsummer or by the weeks still left of the summer, thus, hálfum mánaði eptir mitt sumar, Nj. 4; er átta vikur lífa sumars, Grág. i. 122; frá miðju sumri til vetrar, 147; er átta vikur eru til vetrar, Nj. 192; er tveir mánaðir vöru til vetrar, 195; liðr á sumari til átta vikna, 93; ellipt., var Rútr heima til sex vikna (vis. sumars), 10.

O. COMPS: sumar-auki, a, m. 'summer-ek', the intercalary week, an Icel. calendar-term; the ancient heathen year consisted of 364 days, or twelve months of thirty days each, plus four days, which were the auka-nætr or 'eke-nights' (see above); the remaining day and a fraction was gathered up into an intercalary week, called 'Summer-ek' or 'Eke-week,' which in ancient times was inserted every sixth or seventh year at the end of summer, which in such years was 191 days long; the 'Summer-ek' was introduced by Thorstein Surt (Thorstein the Wise) in the middle of the 10th century, see Íb. ch. 4, and is still observed in Icel.; now that the Gregorian style is in use in Icel. the intercalary week is inserted every fifth or sixth year; thus the year 1872 is marked as the 'first year after sumarauki,' (the years 1860, 1866, and 1871 being years 'with sumarauki'); 1872 sem er 'fyrsta ár eptir Sumarauka,' Icel. Almanack, 1872; the years 1864 and 1870 were 'fjórða ár eptir sumarauka'; thus in 1871 the summer had twenty-seven weeks, the eke-week being the 21st to the 27th of October.

A. A ten, decade. The ancient Scandinavians and Teutons had no indeclinable numeral adjectives from twenty to a hundred; the word tigr (like hundred and þúsund) being a regular substantive. The ancient way of counting is therefore complex and curious; e. g. forty-one was called 'four tens and one,' or 'one of the fifth decade'; forty-eight was called 'four tens and eight,' or by counting back, 'five tens short of two,' cp. the Lat. un-de-viginti, duo-de-triginta: forty-five was called 'half the fifth ten,' and so on, as will best be seen from the references below; and so it goes on to 'one hundred and twenty,' for in Icel. a hundred means the duodecimal hundred. In the 14th century (in deeds) 'tigr' began to lose its character of a substantive, e. g. þrjátígr, fimtígr ..., or þrjátígi, fimtígi (used indecl.), whence at last came the mod. þrjátíu, fjörutíu, fimtíu ..., the tíu being a contracted form from the acc. pl. tigu.

At the same time hundred and þúsund became indecl. adjectives, e. g. þrjátíu, þrjúhundrað, þrjúþúsund skipum, for the old þrem tígum hundruðum, þúsundum skipa.

S.), or the word tigr was altogether discarded, and replaced by skor or sneis (Engl. score, Dan. snes). As in vellums the numbers are mostly represented by Roman figures, and abbreviations used, the editions cannot in these cases be implicitly relied on; the same is the case with old texts preserved in mod. paper transcripts.

TIL, prep. with gen. As to this particle, the two branches of the Teutonic family vary: all the South Teut., including the Goth., present the form without the final t; Goth. du (q. v.) = após, els; A. S., Hel., Old Fris. te, to; North. E. te; Engl. to; Dutch te, toe; O. H. G. zi, za, zuo; Germ. zu; Old Frank. to, te, ti; while the Northerners add the t, as Dan., Swed., North. E. and Scot. till; the Swedes double the t, till. That till is the truer form is seen from rhymes, till vilja, Vigl.; on the other hand, mod. provine. Norse and Swedish drop the t, thus te, Ivar Aasen, Riets. The Engl. uses both forms, to, of place, till, of time, of which the latter is no doubt borrowed from the Norse or Danish: till = to is quite common still in Cumberland and other North. E. counties, 'to gang til Carlisle', etc.; a single instance of the form till is said to exist in an old Northumbrian vellum. Both forms, to and till, are, we believe, identical, the latter being a compound particle, ti-t, although the origin of the t has not as yet been made out. The uncompound particle ti- is not entirely unknown in the Scandinavian, for it has been preserved in the compds mikil-ti, hólt-ti, unn-ti, qq. v. 6. Particles. even brief monosyllabic ones, often turn out to be compds, as e. g. ok (conj.), or the suffixed verbal negative; the prep. 'till' therefore is no more akin to the Germ. noun ziel than is 'ok' (and) to ok (a yoke); the apparent similarity in sense is in both cases merely accidental.

6. The passages quoted all refer to Iceland, except two or three to the Orkneys, and one to Norway, viz. torfmenn. In a country bare or stripped of wood, turf plays an important part in husbandry, as sod for buildings and fencing, and as peat for fuel. In the Orkneys the Norse earl Einar got the soubriquet of 'Turf-Einar' (Torf-Einnarr) for having taught the Norsemen to dig peat (having probably learnt it himself from the Gaelic tribes in Scotland); the place was hence called Torf-nes, Orkn. The digging of peat in the poem Rigmál is one of the many proofs of the birthplace of that poem. The only passage referring to Norway is that cited under torfmenn, a peat-man (see B), unless the legislator here specially had in mind the Norsemen of the Orkneys who, at that time, were an integral part of the Norse kingdom, without a special code of laws.

In one single instance the trolls, strange to say, play a good part, viz. as being grateful and faithful; trolls and giants were the old dwellers on the earth, whom the gods drove out and extirpated, replacing them by man, yet a few remained haunting lonely places in wildernesses and mountains; these trolls, if they meet with a good turn from man, are said to remain thankful for ever, and shew their gratitude; hence the phrases, trygg sem tröll, faithful as a troll; and tryggð-troll, hann er mesta tryggð-troll, a faithful soul, faithful person; trola-tryggð, 'trolls-trust,' faithfulness to death; troll eru i tryggum best is a saying; these milder notions chiefly apply to giantesses (troll-konur), for the troll-carles are seldom well spoken of: for trolls and giants as the older dwellers on earth, see the interesting tale in Ólafu S. Trygg. by Odd, ch. 55, 56 (Fms. x. 328-332).

Q. The ancient Scandinavians, like other old Teutonic people, had no towns; Tacitus says, 'nullas Germanorum populis urbes habitari satis notum est... colunt discreti ac diversi, ut fons, ut campus, ut nemus placuit,' Germ. ch. 16. In Norway the first town, Nidaros, was founded by the two Olaves (Olave Tryggvason and Saint Olave, 994-1030), and this town was hence par excellence called Kaupang, q. v. But the real founder of towns in Norway was king Olave the Quiet (1067-1093); as to Iceland, the words of Tacitus, 'colunt discreti ut fons, etc., placuit,' still apply; 120 years ago (in 1752), the only town or village of the country (Reykjavík) was a single isolated farm. In the old Norse law, the 'Town-law' is the new law attached as an appendix to the old 'Land-law.'

UNDORN, m. (not n. as stated in Lex. Poët.), also spelt undurn and undarn, see the references below: [this word occurs in all ancient Teut. languages; Ulf. undarni-mats or undurni-meal = ἀρνιον, Luke xiv. 12; A. S. undern; Hel. undorn; O. H. G. untarn. Afterwards it was disused in writing, but in provincial dialects it still survives in all Teutonic countries, Scandinavia, Germany (Bavaria, the Rhine), England (Cumberland, Yorkshire), everywhere, except in Iceland, where, strange to say, it is unknown in speech as well as in writing; thus, Swed. undan, undarn, unden; in Norway undaale; Bavaria untarn (Schmeller); Fris. ouern; provinc. Engl. orndorn, ounder (Brockel); in all these dialects it means a middle-meal, a kind of lunch, taken either in the afternoon at three o'clock (this seems to be the prevailing sense, at least in Scandinavia), or in the forenoon at nine: even a verb has been formed, thus in Sweden sova und is to take a nap at lunch-time, at midday (Rietz); in the Rhine country undern is said of cattle lying down at midday (Schmeller).]

B. USAGE.—In old Icel. or Norse writers the word occurs five times, thrice in poets, twice in prose; the original sense was undoubtedly a time of the day, either mid-afternoon, i. e. three o'clock P. M., or mid-forenoon, i. e. nine o'clock A. M., the sense of food being a derived one (like mál, q. v.): I. mid-afternoon, answering to the nones of eccl. writers; morgin hétu ok miðjan dag, undorn ok aptan, they called morning and midday, 'undorn' and evening, Vsp. 6 (undurn, Hb. l. c.), where undorn is placed midway between noon and eve. 2. mid-forenoon; um morguninn at undurni, in the morning at undurn time,

O. H. L. 65; þá hringt er til miðs-morguns, ok hafa unninn eiddinn fyrr en hringi at undurn (dat.) at Krists-kirkju, when it rings at mid-morning time, and shall have taken the oath ere the bells at Christ's kirk ring at undurn, N. G. L. i. 308.

II. a meal: hjuggu vér undurn frekum vargi, we carved a meal for the greedy wolf, i. e. we slew many in the battle, Km. 2; örn drekkir undarn, the eagle drinks undarn, Edda 101 (in a verse of about 1030 A. D.), the various readings (undranar and undjarn) shew that the transcribers did not understand the word.

65r In the Icel. day-marks only nón (q. v.) is of eccl. Lat. origin; may not undorn be the old heathen term which was displaced by that word? the passage in Vsp. favours this suggestion.

V (vaff), the twenty-second letter of the alphabet, was by the ancients called vend, q. v. = A. S. wen, whence Icel. vindandi, q. v.; like v, it is represented by ᚹ in the Runes; in old vellums by ᚹ, a form borrowed from the A. S.; later by v or w, according to the Latin usage. The Icel. v answers etymologically to Engl. and Germ. w (not v), but the form w is little used, though not quite unknown in Icel. vellums.

B. PRONUNCIATION, CHANGES.—The v is now sounded in Icel. as in English, by a slight touch of the lip and teeth (not like the South German, with both lips). It is said (Rietz) that a w or double v is still sounded in a remote Swedish county (Dalarna), and the opinion of English phonetic philologists is that the English w represents the old Teutonic value of that letter, which has since been lost all over the Continent, as well as in Iceland. The Icelandic formation of words goes far to prove that the old Scandinavian v was a semi-vowel, and not a full consonant as it is now: 1. traces are found of v alliterating with a vowel; on an old Runic stone (of the 10th century?) in the island Öland (off the coast of Schonen) we read—Vandils förmungundar, ur-grandari (v, i, and a making the three staves). In verses which have passed through Icelandic oral tradition, alliteration like this could hardly have survived, except in a very few cases (there are, however, some such, svaf vatr Freyja átta nóttum, þkv. 28; Öðinn á jarla þá er i val falla, Hbl. 24; önu verr, La. 36, cp. Hm. 22); but on the Runic stone, the words still remain as they were first engraved. 2. the frequent 'vocalisations' involving the loss of v, which is indeed the most mutable of all letters: a. ve, vi change into y, ve into ö: a v cannot be sounded before a u-vowel, viz. before u, ó, ú, á, y, ý, æ, ø; countless instances of this are to be found under the heads of v-, dv-, dv-, kv-, sv-, tv-, þv-; cp. as specimens the tenses of verbs, vaða, valda, vata, vefa, tofa, koma, vinna, vinda, svinna, svella, vella, velta, verpa, verða, hverfa, svekka, svekka, svekka, þverra, sveigja, þvá, sverja; and also hváll and hóll, hvat and hót, vau and ón, váru and órn, kvef and kóf kaf kofa, svartr and sorti surtr syrra, verk and yrkja orka.

β. more rarely, before other vowels, as, þeita for þveita, silungr for svilungr, hika for hvika, skak for skvak, þi and þvi. γ. v and j interchange, as in bjól for hvel, sjót for sveit, skjal for skval, jurt for vurt, jartegn for vartegn, hvær for hjarni; in verbal inflexions, -va into -jo, as byggva into byggja, syngva into syngja. δ. in a few words the v has been saved by a change in the following vowel, as in verk, cp. A. S. weorc, virkr for vyrkr; virgull (a halter, Goth. wurgila), væðr and æðr, Svannir Senniskr.

ε. for the loss of v before a u-vowel see the introduction to the letter Ö, U, Y, Æ, Ø; so in parts of England and in Scotland at the present day men say ool for wood. ζ. in a few other words initial v is dropped when in compds, vegr in Nor-vegr, cinn-ig, hinn-ig, þann-ig, hværn-ig; vangr in kaup-angr, Harð-angr; völlr in þreskj-öldr; valdr in Arm-aldr, Har-aldr; verðr in dög-urðr; vindr in Ön-undr; vin in Byörg-yn; vé or veig in þyri, q. s. þór-vé, and in Dan. Odens-e. η. again u has changed into v in várr q. s. úrr, órr, A. S. úrr, Engl. owr, and in vesall q. s. usall (see várr and vesall).

II. changes of later date, in the 14th and 15th centuries, or somewhat earlier,—old Icel. vá was turned into vö, and at last into vo; svá, svó, svo; vár, vót, vor; tvá, tvó, tvo; ván, vón, von; vápn, vöpn, vopn; vátr, vóttr, vottr; váði, vóði, vóði; kváma, kvóma, koma: the old vá is proved by rhymes, as vátr and gráa, svá and á; that this vá did not change immediately into the present vo, but passed through an intermediate vö, is shewn by rhymes in poems of the 14th and 15th centuries; e. g. vórr and þórr, Skíða R. 47, 70, 119, 181; stór, vór, 69; vöðinn, Öðinn, 109; vótt (testem), vótt, 122; gáma, kváma, Völs R. 199; vórr, stórr, 212; stórr, hvórr, 248: the vö still remains in vóru (erant), although short o in voru is rapidly displacing the old long vowel. This later change of vá into vö, compared with the old dropping of the v whenever it came in contact with a u or o, shews that at the time when it took place (the 14th century), v cannot any longer have had the same sound as it had five or six centuries before, when the great and systematic vocalisation of it took place. In mod. Icel. v has even reappeared in a few, especially verbal, forms (where people are still conscious of the lost v), so that Icel. now say hvurfu, hvorfinn, hvyrr (from hverfa); so also, but esp. in later vellums, less in speech, the forms vrðu, vorðinn, vultu, vundu, vörðu, etc., from verða, velta, vinda, verpa; cp. also the mod. sound of the word Guð: again, in words like ull, úlfr, orð, óna, etc., a restoration was impossible, all remembrance of the v having been lost for a thousand years; but phonetically, since v became a labial consonant, an Icelander might and could say vull, völfr, vorka, vord, etc., just as well as von, vor, votr.

III. for the dropping of v before r (and l) see the introduction to the letter R (as in rangr = Engl. wrong): it is doubtful whether Icel. vág-rek (= a wreck, flotson) bears any relation to vágr (a wave): the v may here have been saved by means of a false etymology, vágrek for vrak. 2. in a few cases an aspirate (þ) has been substituted for an original w, e. g. Icel. hreidr (a nest), cp.

Engl. wreat, Goth. wriþus; Icel. hrista, akin to Engl. wrist, Dan. vriste; Icel. hrekja, akin to A.S. wreccan, Engl. wreck; Icel. hrina, akin to Dan. wrinke; and perhaps a few more words. 3. in still fewer instances the r has fallen out, the w or v remaining; these words are veita (to trench), veiting (a trench, drainage), for vreita, vreiting (akin to writa); veina (II) = vreina; and lastly, vá for vrá (a cabin).

IV. an interchange of v and f occurs in a few instances, e.g. ái-fangi, áfangi, qs. ái-vangr; in var-nagli and far-nagli; in varinn and farinn, see fara A. VI. 8; in válgr and fálgr. 2. in inflexive syllables, like örfar, snjófar, böf (ör, snjó, bö), and the like, the change of v into f is etymologically erroneous, but phonetically indifferent, final or medial f being one in sound with v. V. for the v or w as the cause of a vowel change, see Gramm. p. xxix. 2. it is dropped in inflexions in many words, such as in mörr, böð, stöð, dögg, högg, böl, öl, söl, sjör, mjör, mjöl, kjöt, hey, sær, snær, fræ, bygg, lyng; adj. hár, mjóð, þjóðkr, döðkr, röðkr, glöðgr, etc.

Many of the preceding phenomena (esp. in I. and III) could not possibly be accounted for, unless we assumed that, at some early time, when those changes took place, the v was sounded, not as a consonant, but as a kind of oo sound, half consonant, half vowel; if so, no sound could answer more nearly to it than the mod. Engl. w; the change may have taken place at a very early date, prob. before the settlement of Icel. Norse words in the Shetland and Orkney dialects point to v not w, e.g. væ = Icel. vágr.

VAD, n., pl. vöð; [A.S. wæd; Swed.-Dan. vad, vade-sted; cp. vápŊna-tak, n. [A. S. wæpen-getac; Engl. wapentake], a weapon-grasping, a law phrase; in their assemblies the ancients used to express their consent by waving or brandishing their weapons, 'si placuit [sententia] fratre concutunt, honoratissimum assensus genus est armis laudare,' Tacit. Germ. ch. 11; 'more Dacorum tela mutuae voluntatis pacto una concusserunt,' Dudo De Moribus et Actis Normannorum, iii. 96; 'collisione armorum et contactu,' Andreas Suneson (Lex Scan.); var Sverri geit konungs-nafn á þessu átta-fylknaþingi ok dæmt með vápŊna-taki, Fms. viii. 41; æptu allir upp með vápŊna-taki, at þeir skyldi allir vera útlægir, Hkr. iii. 325, v. l.

2. metaph. a vote or decree, resolution passed at a public assembly; veita göra vápŊnatak, eiga v. at e-u; skulu þingmenn honum jöðr dæma ok veita honum v. til þess, at hann kvegi verja jöðr sína með lögum ok dómi, N. G. L. i. 89; þá eigu býjar-menn at leggja dóm á ok veita v. at, Grág. ii. 409 (referring to Norway); beiddi þess alla er á vöru þinginu, liðsmenn, bændr ok bæjar-menn, at þeir skyldi göra v. at því, at dæma með lögum... Fms. vii. 293; áttu þeir handfesti ok v. at þessu heiti er konungr mælti fyrir, viii. 55; var þá gört lögtekit, ok átt v. at, at Sveinn konungr skyldi kjósa þann af sonum sínum sem hann vildi til konungs eptir sik í Danmörk, xi. 213; njóti sá vátta sinna ok æsti bændr vápŊnataka, N. G. L. i. 250; þá eigu þingmenn honum með vápŊnatak jöðr at skeyta, 96; ef maðr rýfr þann dóm er dæmdr er á alþingi, ok v. er at átt innan Lögrétu ok útan, Js. 7, N. G. L. ii. 190; ok vér saman settum ok samþykktum ok lýst vár þá í Tunsbergi fyrir almúganum ok v. á tekit (resolved) at fyrir lög skyldi dæma... iii. 206.

III. in the Icel. parliament (alþingi) the word assumed a peculiar sense, for in the Grág. 'vápŊnatak' means the breaking up of the session, when the men resumed their weapons, which had been laid aside during the session (see vápŊnaburðr, vápŊn A); þat skal vera fjórtán nóttum eptir vápŊnatak, en þat heitir v. er alþýða riðr af alþingi, Hrafn. 19, referring to the middle of the 10th century, where however it may be an anachronism; but in the Grágás and in Icel. of the 12th and 13th centuries it was a standing term, see Grág. passim; eptir vápŊnatak, i. 80; fjórtán nóttum eptir vápŊnatak, 123, 194, ii. 178.

III. in that part of England which formed the ancient Denelagu, 'wapentak' or 'wapentag' came to mean a subdivision, answering to 'hundred' in the Saxon shires. Although altered in sense, this word was no doubt imported from the Danish, for in Leges Edvardi Confessoris, ch. 30, the words 'sub lege Anglorum' and 'lingua Anglica' are simply an error of a scribe for Danorum, Danica, for 'taka' is not A. S., but Norse, see Konrad Maurer, Germania xiv. 317 sqq.

VÁRR, vár, várt, mod. vor, a possess. pron. This word has undergone several changes, starting from an original form uus, Goth. unsar, which was contracted into ús, cp. órr, p. 469; next the s changed into r (as in vera, heyra, eyra, járn), thus it became úrr or órr, cp. A. S. úre, Engl. our; lastly, the initial vowel was turned into the cognate consonant v, prob. from being confounded with the personal pronoun vér. The old poets seem only to know the vowel form, as is always seen in alliteration, Vpm. 4, 7, Hým. 33, Hkv. Hjörv. 23; and so in rhymes, stórr, órr, Kormak. Thorodd cites this form, órr eru ú-ræðir drar; and the earliest vellums use it throughout. About A. D. 1200 vár begins to appear, an innovation prob. imported from abroad; thus in Clem. S. (Arna-Magn. 645), p. 147, 'órr', 'órum', six times (ll. 1, 4, 9, 12, 13, 28), but 'vár', 'várr', twice (ll. 6, 25); in a few poems of the 12th century, preserved in late vellums, the spelling is 'vórr,' whereas the alliteration and rhyme demand ó, e. g. Líkn. 24, Harms. 53, 54, 88;

in Ls. 52 'vömminn vár' is an exception and otherwise corrupt, for 'vár' could not have existed at the time when that poem was composed. In this way the modern várr arose, being quite peculiar to the Scandinavian: [Dan. vor, Swed. vár; whereas Goth. unsar, Germ. unsar, answer to the obsolete Icel. órr; and A. S. úre, Engl. our, answer to early Icel. órr]:—our.

VERA, older form vœsa, the verb substantive; pres. em, ert, er, pl. erum, eruð, eru; pret. var, vart (mod. varst), var, pl. váru or vóru; an obsolete öru occurs, Sæm. (once), Orkn. 426. l. 11, Nj. 81, Thom. 28, 90, 102, 116, 150, 196, Ísl. ii. 482; pres. subj. sé, sér (Vpm. 4, 7), sé; the older form is sjá, en ek sjá, Clem. 138. l. 14; at ek sjá... ok sé mér eigi reiðr, 145, Fms. viii. 299, x. 384, xi. 124, Eg. 127; for the forms sják, sjákk, see below; the mod. forms are sé, sért, sér (eg sé, þú sért; sért and ert make a rhyme in Pass. 34. 5); imperat. ver, vertu; see Gramm. p. xxiii: there also occurs a subj. pres. verir, veri, Sdm. 22, Ls. 54; þat á veri, Am. 36; skósmiðr þú verir, Hm. 126, but rarely.

A. CHANGES AND FORMS.—Vera is an anomalous verb, which has undergone several changes: I. by changing s to r; of the older form there occur, the infin. vœsa, pres. es, pret. vas, vast (vastu), vas; pres. subj. vœsi; imperat. ves, MS. 623. 25. l. 14, 645. 61. l. 33. 677.

40. l. 38; vestu, 623. 25, Post. (Unger) 129. l. 27, 229. l. 12; vœsum, Hom. (Arna-Magn. 237) p. 214. l. 8; pres. indic. 2nd pers. est, Glm. 372; 3rd pers. es; but no traces remain of the older form in pret. plur. indic. and subj. (váru væri, never vásu væsi). Rhymes in poets and the spelling of the oldest extant poems show that the s form alone existed in Icel. down to about the end of the 12th century, the time of Snorri Sturluson, when the modern forms crept in probably from Norway, for there the change seems to have taken place a century or so earlier; the old Norse vellums (written in Norway or by Norsemenn) are distinguished from the Icel. by their constant use of the r: the phrase 'at upp vœsandi sólu,' in N. G. L. l. 4, being the only instance of the s form in all the Norse vellums. The earliest instances extant of a rhyme to the r form are, the Ht. of Rognvald, earl of the Orkneys; he was a native of Norway, born about A. D. 1100, and the poem was composed about A. D. 1145; another instance is 'vara, fara' in Fms. vii. 185, in a poem about A. D. 1140, written by an Icelander who had lived in Norway the greater part of his life, the rhyme is therefore a Norwegianism. The first instance in an Icel. poem is in the Ht. of Snorri, A. D. 1222. Instances from poets, Hallfred, Sigvat, Arnór, and coeval poets; vœsa, vœsi; sáð með Sygna væsi; þági vas sem þessum; væst til Róms í báða; væsta, væsta; vas fyrir Mikkjals-messu; nú es um verk þau er vœsi; bráðat þat dagr báðsi; from A. D. 1100–1150, Grœnli, Pd., etc., svás, væsir; væst, væsi; vasa, væsar; væstu, væstni; væstu, væstni; etc., on the other hand, in the poem of earl Rögnvald, vera, væra; væra, væra; vær, vær (twice); from later Icel. poems it is sufficient to note, værð, værðum; værð, værta; værð, værta; værð, værta, etc. This may sometimes serve as a test, e. g. var ek nær við-eign væra, Grœtt, and skip-kon saman væra, Gisl., are impossible in the mouth of poets of the early Saga time; the verses of both these Sagas are a later composition.

2. as to the spelling of the MSS.,—the oldest (the Arna-Magn. 677, the Elmc. 674, the Ib. etc.) use the s throughout: vellums of the next period, about A. D. 1200 (e. g. Arna-Magn. 623 and 645), use the later form sparingly, even the second hand in the Reykholt's maldagi gives 'es, not 'er.' Again, in the vellums of the middle of the 13th century, such as the Cod. Reg. of the Sæm., the Grág., and the Mork., the mod. spelling has entirely got the better of the old, and an 'es' only creeps in, as if unawares, from an older copy. Of the poetical literature, the Pd. alone has been preserved in a copy old enough to retain the s; all the rest have the modernised spelling, even in the rhymed syllables quoted above; such too is the case with the Cod. Reg. of the Sæm. Edda; but had that vellum been but fifty or sixty years older, the forms vœsa, es, vas, etc. would now be the established spelling in Editions of these poems.

3. on Danish and Swedish Runic stones, the 3rd pers. pret. sing. is a word of frequent occurrence; the best Danish monuments have vas, e. g. ias vas farinn vœtr, Thorsen 93 and 101 (on a stone of the reign of Sweyn, died A. D. 1014). In Sweden the great majority present the later form: the so-called Ingvar stones are chronologically certain, being of the middle of the 11th century (Ingvar died A. D. 1039); there we read, 'vas' (twice), 'variinn' (once), 'var' (thrice, being twice spelt with A, once with R); this shews that about this time in Sweden the later or more modern form had begun to be used, but that the old was still remembered.

II. suffixed personal pronoun or suffixed negation; em'k (tautologically ek em'k = I am I), emk, Ad. 1, Vpm. 8, Fms. xi. 91; ek emk, Mork. 89. l. 13, 104. l. 23, Clem. 136. l. 20, 138. l. 13; vask, I was, 133. l. 25, Mork. 89. l. 16; vark, Post. 225, v. l. 15; ek vark, Ls. 35; vestu, be thou, Clem. 129. l. 27; es þú, art thou, l. 30, 130. l. 11; sják (may I be), ek sják, Mork. 134; at sják, 189. l. 29; ek sják, Hbl. 9, Hkr. 1. 20; at ek gjarn sják, Stor.; with double k, þó at ek sjákk, Mork. 89.

2. a medial form, erumk, eramk, or apocopated erum, Stor. 1, Ad. 16, Hkr. 1. 25, Korm. ch. 5. 2, Ls. 35, Bragi (see senna); leið erum-k fjöll, Edda (in a verse); várumk, were to me, Am. 78.

3. suff. neg. eru-mk-a, it is not to me, Stor. 17, Eg. (in a verse); emkat-ek, am I not I, i. e. I am not, Hbl. 34, Skm. 18, Ó. H. 192 (in a verse); er-at, er-at, or er-a, es-a, is not, passim; eru-ð, are not, Skv. 2. 42; ert-attu, thou art not, Vtkv.; vart-attu, thou wast not, Gs., Eg. (in a verse); veri-a, be not, Mork. 37. l. 8. 4. sé's = sé es, that is, Hallfred (Fs. 95); svá's = svá es, so is, Fms. vii. (in a verse).

III. the plur. eru when suffixed to words ending in r drops the initial s, and is suffixed; this spelling, which agrees with mod. Icel. pronunciation, was afterwards disused; þeir-ro, they are, Gm. 34; margir-ro, many are, Hkr. 2. 11; Æsir-ro, the Aesir are, Vsp. 49; skildir-ro, shields are, 44; torögæfir-ro, rare are, Korm. (in a verse); hverjar-ro, which are, Vpm. 48; langir-ro, long are, Gg.; tveir-ro, þeir-ro, fjórir-ro, two, three, four are, Edda 108; báðir-ro, both are, Mork. 169; hér-ro, here are, 234; þér-ro, ye are, MS. 686 B. 1; hryggvir-ro, id.; hver-ro, who are, Mork. 96; úvar-ro, woe are, Gm. 53; værrom, vérrum, we are, Edda i. 516, Fms. x. 421; hverrtu [cp. North. E. we'art'ow, lad] (hverrtu karl, who art thou, carle?), Frisb. 256. l. 8; ir-rot, ye are, Ó. H. 151.

IV. the pres. 1st pers. em [Engl. am] has changed into er (eg er, þú ert, hann er), making the 1st and 3rd pers. uniform; this new form appears in vellums about the end of the 13th century, but the word being usually abbreviated (ð=em, ð=er), it is often hard to distinguish. In the Icel. N. T. and in hymns the old 'em' still remains in solemn language, em eg, Matth. xxvii. 24; eigi em eg, John xviii. 17; eg em hann, 5, 8, xi. 25, xv. 1, 5, Matth. xiv. 27; em eg eigi postuli, em eg eigi frjáls, I Cor. ix. 1; em eg orðinn, 20, 22, and passim.

VESALL, adj., fem. vesul or vesöl, neut. vesall. The forms vary, being contracted or uncontracted, veslir, etc., as well as vesalir, etc., whence lastly, vesalir, etc.: a. contr. veslir, veslar, veslum, Al. 57, Th. 6; vesla (acc. pl.), Hom. 109; veslu (gen. fem.), Post. (Unger) 108; veslir, Ó. H. 151, Skv. 681; vesla (gen.), Fms. viii. 242 (vesala, v. l. of a later vellum); selum ok veslum. β. uncontr. vesala = vesla, Fms. ii. 46; vesala, Post. (Unger) 18 (vesala, v. l.); vesalir, Al. 56, l. 18; this regular declension is still in full use in Icel. speech, only not contracted, e. g. vesall, vesalingr, vesalir (not veslir); vesla, Fas. i. 49 (paper MS.); so also in the compar. either vesalli, Greg. 37, Sd. 188; vesalla, 656 C. 34; vesalstr, Kormak, Bjarn. (in a verse); but veslari, Barl. 23 (vesalli, v. l.) Ves is the root, -all the inflexive syllable; the form vesall is a later form, from a false etymology, as if from vé- privative, and sæll, happy. The origin of vesall is dubious, the radical s is against a derivation from the compar. verri, Goth. wairiza; and the short vowel is against deriving it from väs, vés, q. v. The true etymology, we believe, is that vesall stands for 'usall,' being derived from the prep. ur, or-, in its ancient form ur; Goth. ur-; Icel. ur-, ör-; this etymology is confirmed by form and sense alike; the old phrases, alls vesall (omnium experta), vesall eigu (proprii experta), were originally alliterative phrases; in Hm. 22, 69, vesall is made to alliterate with a vowel (vesall maðr ok illa skapi ... erit maðr ölls vesall þótt hann sé illa heill); usall is actually found written in Nj. (Lat.) 264, v. l.; the change of ur into ur may be illustrated by the case of várr (q. v.); it is the opposite to that vocalisation of v which so frequently takes place. As to sense, vesall originally meant bereft, destitute of, = Lat. expertus; and is followed by a genitive: [the Dan. form is usæl, less right usæl.]

(Unger) 233; vettr is freq., esp. in N. G. L.; double consonants are in vellums difficult to distinguish from single, and so it may well have been the current form, although the Edd. give the mod. form (vetr): in poets we find, mitt sextingu vistra, Glúm. (in a verse); vittr occurs in Icel. ballads of the 15th century, see þryml., Völs. R., Skáld H. R., but here it is merely an imitation of Danish originals, for the word in Icel. always took the assimilated form: [Ulf. vintrus = χρυσῆς and ἔρος; A. S., Engl., and Germ. winter; Dan.-Swed. winter, for the assimilation of ur into it did not prevail in the south of Scandinavia, see Gramm. p. xxx, col. 1.]
 A. A winter; winter, like summer (see sumar), is a calendary period, containing 180 days, or six months of thirty days; the winter begins on the Saturday next before St. Luke's day (old style), or on St. Luke's day, if a Saturday. In the Gregorian style, for 1872 and 1873, vetrar-dagur fyrsti, the first winter day = Saturday, the 26th of Oct.; miðr vetr, mid-winter, the 24th of Jan.; síðasti vetrar dagur, the last winter day = Wednesday, the 23rd of April; Laugardagr skal fyrstr vera í vetri, en þaðan skal vera sex mánuðr þrjátígi náttu til sumars, K. þ. K. 166; vetr kemur laugardaginn er næstr er fyrir Lúkas-messu, en hana sjálfa ef hláupir ferr eptir, Rb. 490; Drottins-dagur inn fyrsti í vetri skal vera um þriðri frá messu-degi Cosmi ok Damiani, Rb. 434; as a general term, í vetri, this winter, Nj. 4; hafa blót hvern vetr, Ó. H.; Miðr vetr, Mid-winter, see above; miðr vetrar skéið, mid-winter time, Fb. i. 204; miðs vetrar blót, a sacrificial feast at mid-winter, see miðr B; á vetri, or í vetri, see prepp. á and í; mikill vetr, a cold winter, Bs. i. 873; harðr, kaldr, Kominn er kaldr vetr, initial words of a hymn.
 II. = a year; as in A. S. days were reckoned by nights (see nótt), so years were counted by winters; in Ulfilas (Matt. ix. 20, Luke ii. 42, viii. 42) eros is rendered by vintrus; and so at present in Icel., a person is so many 'winters' old; tólf vetra gamall, K. þ. K. 134; sextán vetra gamall, Grág. i. 197; and ellipt. leaving out gamall, tólf vetra, Fms. i. 8; tíu vetrum ríðart, 61; sex tigi vetra konung, Eg. 363; sjau vetr ena ársömu, Ver. 17 (of king Pharaoh's dream); þeirra var vetrar-munr, difference in age of one year, Dropl. 7; for more references, see tigr B.

G. L. i. 348; á vetradag, in the winter, Fms. viii. 50, Bs. i. 324, v. 1.; fyrsti vetradagur,

S. and Hel. wic; Engl. week; O. H. G. wecha; Germ. woche; Dan. uge; Swed. vecka; in Norse dialects vika, veka, vuku, veku, and in compds -oke, Jóns-oke, Ivar Aasen.]

B. USAGES.—A week, passim: used in a peculiar manner, as marking the remaining weeks of the summer; líðr á sumarit til átta vikna, viz. till eight weeks remained before winter, Nj. 93; var Rútr heima til sex vikna, 10; vá Bóðvarr Kolbein Drottins-daginn at fjórum vikum, Ann. 1376. The ancient Scandinavians and Teutons in heathen times seem to have counted the year by pentads, called fimt, as has already been remarked s. v. fimt (p. 153), to which may be added the authority of the late Prof. Schlegel of Copenhagen in a notice of 1825, mentioned in Lex. Mythol. p. 753. The time when the Scandinavians changed their system is quite unknown; it would seem that in Icel. 'weeks' were already in use in the middle of the 10th century, could we but trust the record in Ib. ch. 4 as authentic in its details.

VIKA, u, f. [a word quite different from the preceding, akin to vik and vik, the root word being vikja, q. v.]: —a sea mile, knot, answering to a mod. geographical mile, and equal to a 'röst' on land (see röst, p. 508): the term seems to have been derived from vik, a small bay, denoting the distance from ness to ness, and so referring to a time when ships coasted along-shore; the word is still in almost exclusive use in Icel. The following instances may suffice:—the distance from Reykjanes til Flateyjar, þat eru þrjár vikur sjóvar, Bs. i. 461; from Drangey in the north to the nearest point on the mainland as one vika (frá Reykjum er skemst til eyjarinnar ok er þat vika sjóvar . . . þat var vika sjáfar sem skemst var til lands ok eyjunnar, Grett. 144, 148); eyjar þær sem Ólaf-eyjar heita, þær liggja út á firdinum hálsa aðra viku undan Reykjanesi, 125; heyrði yfir til Skarfstæða hálfa viku sjóvar (viz. from Ljárskógur), 129; víkingr, f. a freebooting voyage, piracy; see víkingr. In heathen days it was usual for young men of distinction, before settling down, to make a warlike expedition to foreign parts, this voyage was called 'víkingr,' and was part of a man's education like the grand tour in modern times; hence the saying in the old Saga,—"when I was young and on my voyage (víkingr), but now I am old and decrepit;" so a son begs his father to give him a 'langskip,' that he may set out on a 'víkingr,' cp. the scene of the young Egil and his mother Bera, and the reference Fms. i. 69; see B. The custom was common among Teutonic tribes, and is mentioned by Caesar B. G. vi. ch. 23 (latrocinia nullam habent infamiam, quae extra fines cuiusque civitatis fiunt, sqq.), only there it is a foray on land; (cp. the mod. American filibustering.)

víkingligr, adj. like a viking, martial, Ld. 276.

víkingr, m. a freebooter, rover, pirate, but in the Icel. Sagas used specially of the bands of Scandinavian warriors, who during the 9th and 10th centuries harried the British Isles and Normandy: the word is peculiarly Norse, for although it occurs in A. S. in the poem Byrnoth (six or seven times), it is there evidently to be regarded as a Norse word; and prob. so too in the poem 'Exodus,' in the words rondas bærun sæ-wicingas, over salne mere; lastly, in 'Widsith,' as the name of a people, and Liðwicingas (= Liðungar? q. v.) The word 'víkingr' was thought to be derived from vík (a bay), from their haunting the bays, creeks, and fjords;—or it means 'the men from the fjords,' the coincidence that the old Irish called the Norsemen 'Lochlannoch,' and Norway 'Lochlan,' is curious.

B. A few selected references will illustrate the word:—Naddodr hét maðr, hann var víkingr mikill, Landn. 26; Flóki Vilgerðarson hét maðr, hann var v. mikill, 28; slogusk í Eyjarnar víkingar ok herjuðu ok ræntu víða, 41; Ólfr víkingr ok Ólafir bekkir fóru samskipa til Íslands, 202; en er þeir lágu til lafs kómu at þeim víkingar ok víða ræna þá, en Gautr laust staðnbúann þeirra við hjálmun-veit, ok logðu víkingar við þat frá, síðan var hann kallaðr Hjálmun-gautr, 223; Hrafn hafnar-lykkill var víkingr mikill, hann fór til Íslands ok nam land..., 269; Ólfrir barna-karl hét maðr ágætr í Noregi, hann var víkingr mikill, hann lét eigi henda börn á spjóta-oddum sem þá var víkingum titt, þri var hann barna-karl kallaðr, 308; maðr hét Þorsteinn, gamall maðr ok sjónstíll, hann hafði verið rauda-víkingr (q. v.) í æsku sinni, Þorrt. 8; þorkell miðlangr, hann er raudr víkingr ok í missætti við Hákon jarl, Fms. xi. 121; her-víkingr, a pirate, i. 225 (p. 259); víkingr efni, víkinga höfðingi, konungr, Eg. 190, Fms. vi. 389, Fas. ii. 132; víkinga lið, Stj.; víkinga skip, ikeid, snekkja, Hkr. i. 296, Korm. 236, Fms. i. 289; víkinga bæli, Eg. 251; víkinga rán, Fms. vi. 291; Bera kvæð Egil vera víkingr-efni... þegar hann hefði aldr til ok honum væri fengn herskip, Eg. 190 (and the following verse)—þat mælti mín móðir, at mér skyldi kaupna féy ok fagrar árar, fara í hring með víkingum...; at Gizori má gora þrjá menn, hann má vera víkinga höfðingi... þá má hann ok vera konungr... með þrjú hatti má hann vera biskup, ok er hann best til þess fallinn af þessum þremr, Fms. vi. 389; on Swed. Nj. 12; hann orti kvæði ok eru þessar visur í, Fms. v. 108; vísu lengd, the length of a stanza, Edda (Ht.) i. 606, 656; referring to the repetition of verses as a means of measuring time (minutes), Fs. (Vd. ch. 16); lausá-vísa, a ditty; nið-vísa, söng-vísa; hólðar dæva harla snart, þá heyrst vísan mín, a ditty; as the names of shorter poems, as, Nesja-visur, Austrfarar-visur, by Sighvat; Vísna-bók, a book of lays. Unlike the old Greek epics, as well as the poems of the Saxon Beowulf, all ancient Northern poetry is in strophic lays. Four sets of alliteration make a verse (vísa), two a half strophe, vísu-helmingr, Edda (Ht.) i. 610, or half vísa, Grág. ii. 148; one set a quarter of a vísa (vísu-fjórðungr); each alliterative set being again divided into two halves, called vísu-órð, a word or sentence, Edda (Ht.) i. 596, cp. Hallfr. S. ch. 6 (Fs. 96, 97); thus 'fastorðr skyli fyrða | fengsæll vera þengill' is an alliterative set.

3. The vel-lums give verses in unbroken lines, but in modern print each alliterative set is divided into two lines; this may do for metres of the dróttkvæð kind, with two rhyming syllables in each vísu-órð; but in the brief kvíðu-háttir (the metre of the Vsp.) each alliterative set should, for the sake of the flow of the verse, be printed in one line, thus,
Hljóðs bið ek allar helgar kindir | meiri ok minni mögu Heimdalar; for a pause only follows between each pair of sets, but none between the sub-staves and the head-stave. This plan is that advocated by Jacob Grimm: the other, commonly followed in the Editions, chops the verse into—hljóðs bið ek allar | helgar kindir | meiri ok minni | mögu Heimdalar.

VÖLVA, u. f., also spelt völfa, gen. völu, pl. völur; völfa, or also völur or völur; gen. pl. does not occur; the nom. Vala is erroneous; [the etymology as well as the origin of this word is uncertain; but may not the Norse Völva and the Gr. οἰβύλλα be relations? the identity in sense at least is very striking; the Gr. word first occurs in Aristoph., and then in Plato; may it not have been adopted from some Scythian tribe, for a word like this, if Greek, could hardly fail to occur in Homer? in völva an initial s, we suppose, has been lost (qs. svölva); in the Greek the τ would be an inserted vowel]:—a prophatess, sibyl, wise woman; völva, seiðkona, spákona (qq. v.) are synonymous. The ancient Sagas contain many remarkable records of the heathen wise-women or sibyls, who were held in honour and reverence; at the great feasts and sacrifices in the autumn, the völva (often a woman of rank) went with her troop of maidens through the country, where she, so to say, crowned the feast; she was seated on a high seat (seiðhjallr) in the hall, where she wrought her spells and sang her 'weird-songs' (vǫrdlokur), after which the guests went past her one by one, and she told each his fate, or whatever else one wanted to know, e. g. the course of the coming winter and the like. The former part of the Völuspá is evidently conceived as the inspired song of a völva, seated on her high seat, and addressing Odin, while the gods listen to her words; and the latter part of the poem appears to be a kind of necromancy, or the raising of a dead völva, as also is the lay Vegamiskviða; sú kona var þar í bygd er þorbjörg hét, ok var kölluð lítill völva, hón hafði áttar sér níu systir, ok vöru allar spákönur, en hón var ein þá á lífi, þat var háttir þorbjargar um vetrinn, at hón fór á veizlur ok buðu þeir menn henni mest heim er forvitni var á at vita forlög sín eða áferð, þorí. vöxt, f., pl. vaxtir (q.v.), the sing. being only used in Edda (GL)

X

X (ex) commonly represents ks, gs (as in other languages), where both letters are radical, thus, ax, fax, lax, sax, öx, vax, vaxa, sex, uxi, vöxtr, fox, jaxl, öxl, q.v.; but huga from hugr; vax from lag; loks from lok; oks (gen.) from ok (jugum); rakstr, bakstr, from raka, baka, etc. The vellums use x in other cases, e.g. sterxti = sterksti, the strongest, Clem. 146; tax (gen.) from tak, N.G.L. i. 47; dúx = dúka, Clem. 127, l. 8; lox = loka, 134; vitrleix = vitrleika, 142; almattex = almáttigs, 133; vixla = vígla, N.G.L. i. 9; fulltinx = fulltings, O.H. 242; vaxcliga = vaskliga, Mork. 178; lyxc = lyfsk, lb. (fine); sekk = sekkask (from fá the verb), Is. i. 351; ux = ups (q.v.), N.G.L. i. 368; or again, vegs = vex (the verb), Hm. 119; lags = lax (salmon), Szm. 212, l. 20 (Bugge); dax = dags, N.G.L. i. 23; but on the whole the vellums distinguish gs, ks, and x, shewing the pronunciation in olden times to have been more distinct than it is now, when all three forms (gs, ks, x) represent the same sound, no matter whether the s be inflexive or not; thus in common modern spelling, both huga and huxa, dags and dax are used at random. In vellums x and r are very much alike; hence in the well-known passage in Vsp. the misreading of særum (nordibus) for særum (ensibus), in all Editions, until Prof. Bugge noticed the stroke underneath the line in Cod. Reg.

Y—Ý

Y is of later origin, and only found in derived words, being an 'umlaut' from u, (y from u, ý from ü); in the Runic alphabet it is placed at the end, and marked ᚿ , see Skúlda (ii. 72); it is there called ýr, a yew-tree,—ýr er vetrgreust viða, 'ýr' is the 'winter-greenest' of trees, Runic poem.

B. The independent sound of y, ý is now lost in Icel., being replaced respectively by the sounds i, í, whereas in mod. Dan., Swed. and Norse the old sound has been preserved; the old Icel. MSS., as well as the rhymes in old poems, distinguish both, except in a few instances, see Gramm. p. xxxv, col. 2 (9). The change from y to i seems to have begun about the time of the Reformation, but in the first printed books, e.g. the N. T. of 1540 and the Bible of 1584, the distinction is still well kept, the remembrance of the old form and etymology being then still alive. Later, the writing became very confused. Some transcribers of the 17th century, e.g. Ketil Jörundsson, a noted copier of old vellums, took the better course, never writing y at all, but i throughout; the same may be observed in the handwriting of some Icelanders down to the present day. In printed books of the 17th and 18th centuries the confusion is great, till of late an accurate spelling has been re-established, though even this fails in a few words; e.g. the ancients spell þryssar, gymbr, q.v.; the mod. þravar, gimbr. The poets of the last three centuries make i and y, ei and ey rhyme indifferently, according to the usage of the living tongue.

II. an initial v is dropped before y, as in yudi, ýði, yrkja, etc.

Z

Z (zet). The ancient language had two sibilant sounds, s and z; of which the z never stands at the beginning of a word, but is merely an s assimilated to a preceding dental, in the combinations ld, nd, nn, ll, rd, gd, t, see Gramm. p. xxxvi, col. 1. ß: its use in ancient vellums is very extensive:

1. in genitives; trollz, íllz (íllr), allz (allr), hóla, Skm. 32; gullz, 22; ellz = elds, botz = botns, Gkv. 3. 9; vatz and vaz = vatus; keyptz, Hm. 107; mútz, Knútz or Knúz = Knúts; vitz (vit); orðz, sverðz, barðz, bordz, garðz, harðz, langbarz, Gkv. 2. 19; Hjörvarðz, Hkv. Hjörv. 19; mordz, bragðz, flagðz, Frisb. 107, l. 19; or also orz, Hm. 141, etc.; prestz, Christz, passim; tjallz, Edda ii. 314; landz or lanz, passim; fjallz, Edda ii. 339; but tjallz, 527; elldz, vindz, 317, 318; gandz, 525; brandz, 529; valldz, 338; sverðz, bordz, 331; but bordz, 463, l. 20; garz, 529; loptz, 341 (twice); but loptz, 317; netz, 327; gautz, 345; hugskozins, Post. 251.

2. in special forms; stendz, Grág. i. 501 (from standa); stennz, id., Ó. H. 143; bitz from binda, Post. (Unger) 154; viak, vizt, vatak from vinda (II), q. v.; but vinna from vinna, q. v.; biz = biðk from biðja, Post. (Unger) 240; indeed bizt, hazt may be both from binda and biðja; blettz and blettz (to blets), hölltiz, qq. v.; beztz or bestz, æztz = æðstz; patz and paz = þat es, Sem, passim; þatz, Am. 87; hvartz = hvart es, Grág. (Kb.) i. 161; even mz (or mzt) for the older m, þóttumz, Gkv. 2. 37.

3. when the z is due to a t following it; in the reflex. -ak is the oldest form, whence -zt, -zt, -zt; andask, andast, andaz, andazst in the superl. zt, efztir, Frisb. 78, l. 20; hardazta, l. 33; snarpazta, l. 16; rikaztr, 207, l. 18; fríðuzt, l. 34; hagazt, Vkv. 18; grimmastaz, Edda ii. 530; máttkaztr, 280; hvitaz, 267; but st is the usual form, thus, sáratz, grimmastz, hvassastz, Gh. 17; in Ást-ríðr = Ást-ríðr, Ó. H. 198, l. 12.

4. in such words as veizla, gæzla, reizla, leizla, hæzla, gæzka, lýzka, æzka, æzli, vitzka or vizka, hizla, væzla, hæzki, = veitsla, ... hírdsla, varðsla, handski, etc.: in reflex. neut. part., thus, hafa borizt, komizt, farizt, tekizt, fundizt, glazt, sagzt, spurzt, kallazt, dæmazt, áizt, ... (from bera ... eiga): in reflex. 2nd pers. pl. pres. and pret., e. g. þér segizt, þér sögduzt, qs. segit-izt, sögdu-izt, so as to distinguish it from the 3rd pers., þeir sögduzt, qs. sögdu-izt.

5. Gíttazt or Gíttazt, þessazt, Ózurt, afrazt, koltr, Ó. H. (pref.); hulizt, hjálmazt; Vitazt, gjafz, q. v.; but slaðs-festz, Grág. (Kb.) i. 88; viz, see viðr II: in foreign names, Jariz-leifr, Jariz-karr, Buriz-leifr, Gkv. 2. 19, Fms. vi. The etymology of words may often be decided by this; e. g. in beisl, a bridle, beiskr, baitr, the s of the vellums shews that neither word is derived from bíta; beiskr is in fact akin to Engl. beestings, Ulf. beist = βίση, A. S. beast; geisla fullr, Hkv. 2. 35, is not from geit, but from geisa: laz or læz (p. 376, col. 1) is from Fr. lace, not = Icel. láss: misseri (q. v.) is no relation to miðr, etc.: at lesti, at last, being spelt with s, not z, is not related to latr, but derived from leistr = a cobbler's last, at lesti = Lat. in calce, see M. Sweet's Ed. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, p. 474; again, vatzitr is akin to vatz = vain: exceptional cases,—vissz, pret. from vita, and sessz, a seat.

II. after a single dental (unless it be t) s, not z, is written; thus, gen. Geds, bods, brauds, auds, göds, óds, vaðs, líðs, óls, fals, háls, frjáls, vins, eins, etc., passim; z is quite exceptional, e. g. lídz, Frisb. 106, l. 16, 33 (but báz, Hbl. 33, Am. 43); so also after rn, rl, ml, rn, sn, gn, barns, Clem. 134; karls, Hkv. 2. 2; jarls, Hm. 97; hrásls, segls, regns, tungls (regns, Edda ii. 340). The vellums are very irregular in the distinction of a single or double consonant, but the sibilant used shews the true form of the word; in 'Odz Colsonar,' Ó. H. (pref.) l. 11, the z and s shew the names to be Oddr and Kolr, not Óðr, Kollr; in a vellum els would be gen. of él, elz of eldr; in grunz, Edda ii. 287; lunz, 317; hlunz, rannz, lanz, 333; elz, Post. (Unger) 234; golz, 225, l. 23; odz, Ó. H. (pref.), l. 11; alz, etc. the z shews that though there is only one n, l, etc. written, they were actually sounded double, grunnz, hlunnz, rannz, landz, eldz, gollz, oddz, allz.

2. the s does not change into z if the word is a compd; as, skáld-skapr, vind-svalr, út-suðr, passim; hírd-stjóri, Edda ii. 335, shewing that in ancient times the pronunciation was more distinct than at the present day; the z in orðstír (Edda ii. 344, orztír, 463) shews that the word is qs. orðz-tírr; yet we find such forms as innizgíli, Post. 238; gudstjállz, 339; ástzamlíga, 243; handzsceld, Barl.; randsaka, Post. 134, l. 29; but rannsaka, l. 14; nauzunz = nauðsynz, Skálda 167, 21; nauzunz, Edda ii. 236; anzvara, annzskoti, = andvara, andskoti, etc.

III. about the 15th century (or earlier) the z sound began to disappear, and s took its place, being at present the only sibilant used in Icel. In later vellums the z is therefore either little used or is misapplied, as in the additions by the third hand in the Flatey-book, or it is used to excess as in modern Dutch. In modern spelling, including Editions of Sagas, the z has been disused, except in the instances coming under the rule given in l. 4: yet with exception of ðz, for the moderns write leizsla, hæzsla, beizsla, náðst, old leizla, názt, except in reizla (i. e. reizla) from reizla; hizla qs. hírdsla.

2. zz is sounded as ss, blessa, Gissur, Óssur; so also vass, boss, = vatz, botz; even orz, garz, lanz, sanz, for orz, garz, lanz, sanz (gen. of orð, garðr, land, sandr).

P

P (horn) was adopted from the Runic alphabet; its ancient name was þorn (iborn).—þann staf er flestir menn kalla þorn, Skálda (Thorodd) 168, cp. Edda ii. 363,—and it is still so called in Icel.; the ancients also called it 'þurs' (giant), which was originally the name of a magical Rune, intended to cause love-madness, and in the Runic poem it is so called—þurs veldr kvenna kvillu; but in the poem Skm. 'þurs' means the magical Rune,—þurs rist ek þér ok þrjá stafi, 'ergi', 'æði', ok 'þola', Skm. 36. Thorodd proposed to call it 'þvi' (like dé, té, bú), Skálda 168. In the Runic inscriptions it is marked þ, seldom þ̅, and the letter is evidently derived from Gr.-Lat., being a Δ or D with the vertical stroke prolonged both ways.

B. SPELLING, PRONUNCIATION, CHANGES.—For the spelling of the ancient vellums see introduction to letter D (p. 93, col. 2). In Icel. there is phonetically a double th sound, as in English, but subject to a different rule; the hard th, marked þ, is only sounded as the initial letter of distinct syllables; whereas the soft th, marked ð, is only sounded as a medial or final; and that the case was the same in olden times, as early as the 12th century, is borne out by the statement of the second grammarian (Gramm. p. xv, col. 1), who counts hard th, or þ, among the 'head-letters,' as he calls them, whereas the soft th he counts among the 'sub-letters' (p. xv, col. 2, ll. 4-6). That the initial th had only one sound in Icelandic is also borne out by the mod. Faroic dialect, which has the closest affinity to the Icelandic; for here the initial þ has, in pronouns and particles as well as in nouns, changed into t, as in ting, tu, teir. But in the rest of Scandinavia the case is different, for there (Dan., Swed., Norse) the initial þ has been changed into d in all particles and pronouns, de, du, dir, dem, den, dette, dig, deden, for-ði (ti is an exception); whilst, in all other words, it has been changed into t, as in ting, taale, tre, etc., which points to a hard and soft th sound, used not as in Icelandic, but as in modern English. According to the views of a gradual and successive 'laut-verschiebung,' as set forth in Mr. Sweet's essay 'On the Old English D' (Appendix I. to Gregory's Pastoral Care, p. 496 sqq.), the Icelandic and the Faroic represent phonetically a later, the early Danish (old Scandinavian and English) an earlier stage in the development of this sound. It is curious to see how in the Faroic the sound has come round to Gr.-Lat. again; thus Faroic trir, tu, = Lat. tres, tu, in Dan. tree, but du.

II. In Icelandic a word with initial þ forming the latter part of a compound, or even if spelt separately, is apt to be changed into d as soon as it loses its full sound, and is pronounced rapidly as an inflexive syllable, the latter part in questions becoming half enclitic, see introduction to letter D, p. 93, col. 2 (C. II). In vellums this is very frequent in the words al-ðingi, Svi-ðið, al-ðýða (= alþingi...); so also á-ðingi = áþingi, Js. 39; úrvar-ðingi, id.; Vaf-ðrudnir, Sæm. (Bugge); hug-ðekkr, O. H. 16, etc.; the pr. names Hall-dórr, Hall-dóra point to a Hall-dórr, Hall-dóra, = Hall-þórr, Hall-þóra; so also Stein-dórr = Stein-þórr, for a þ could only change into d through ð; in Arnórr, qs. Arn-þórr, the þ has been dropped (Arn-þórr, Arn-dórr, Arn-órr?); litt-at = litt-þat, hitt-ó-heldr = hitt-þu-heldr, stytter, make haste, already cited in Run. Gramm.; cp. also the change of the pron. þú into -du, -ðu, -tu, -ti, when suffixed. Quite different and much older is the dropping of initial þ (i.e. ð) in the particles enn = ann = þann, Engl. than, and in at = þat, Engl. that, Old Germ. daz: in the pronouns þér, þið, for ér, ið, the þ comes from the termination of the preceding verb. For the rest see the introduction to letter D, to which we may add that a single Icelandic vellum, the later handwriting in Arna-Magn. 645, now published in Post. (Unger) 216-236, is interesting for its uncertain use of þ and ð; at the time it was written, the ð was still a newly adopted letter, and the transcriber uncertain as to its use, so that no conclusion may be drawn from this isolated case; these are the instances,—upp ðu, 216. ll. 19, 27, 219. l. 39; skirþr ðegar, 217. l. 9; upp ðegar, 220. l. 1; blezopu ðeim, 217. l. 34; af ðeim, 223. l. 10; fyrir ðeim, 224. ll. 14, 18; þopu ðeim, 228. l. 19; vip ða, 218. l. 13, 235. l. 5; þá ðáþan, 235. l. 17; af ðvi, 219. l. 15, 232. l. 21, 234. l. 11, 235. l. 13; ifer ða, 222. l. 31; firir ða trú, 232. l. 34; frá ðér at þú (sic), 226. l. 23; frá þér ef ðu (four lines below); ek bið ðik, 227. l. 17; vip ðik, 236. l. 7; after a comma, ða er rétt, 231. l. 36; ðu laust, 233. l. 32; with nouns and verbs, of ðorp ok borgir, 217. l. 35; ok ðökkupn, 224. l. 25; firir ðys alþýðu, 227. l. 12.

III. the Icel. þ answers to Gr.-Lat. t, see e.g. the root tan (talvo, tendo, tenuis), compared to the Icel. þenja, þunnr; þir = Lat. tres; þómr = Gr. τέπμα, Lat. terminus; þeir, cp. Lat. tēpidus, etc., see the special words.

2. again, Germ. d answers to Icel. þ, ding, drei, denken; in a few words the laut-verschiebung is irregular, thus, Engl. right, Icel. þéttir; þurfa = Engl. dare. Only a few words with initial þ have been adopted in later times, such are, þenkja, þanki, þrykkja (= Germ. denken, ge-danke, drücken); these words were borrowed about the time of the Reformation, probably from German, not Danish, i.e. from words with d; in these words the laut-verschiebung, strange to say, has been duly observed, as if by instinct, which would hardly have been the case had it been borrowed through the Danish t; but in tráss = Germ.

dratzen, mod. Germ. trotzen, Icel. þratta, the true form has not been restored; so also in mod. usage Icelanders are beginning to say tak, tak (= Dan. tak = thanks), unmindful of their own þakk, þakka; t and þ are unsettled in tyrma and þyrma; tolla, see pola (II); tremill and þremill; þeisti and teista; f and þ interchange in Icel. þél, Engl. file; þél and Lat. pilus, þél and sjöl, and in a few other words; s and þ in sist for pust.

ÞADAN, adv., in Norse vellums often spelt þedan, N. G. L. i. 23; þanan, Hb. (1863), 6, 12, 14; [A. ÞAGNAR, gen., see þögn, silence.

ÞAGSI, adj.; the parent-word of the mod. Dan. tavs (silent) has hitherto not been found in the old Icel. literature; it should be þagsi, but most if not all words of that form were obsolete as early as the 12th and 13th centuries, and have disappeared in mod. Icel., as hugsi, staðsi, heitsi...; we believe it is preserved in the corrupted 'þegn varð' in the transcript of the Ib., where we propose to read, svá at allir menn myndi 'þagsi verða' (= Dan. blive tavse) meðan hann mælti at ligbergi, so that all men would become silent whilst he spoke on the Law-bill, Ib. 7. In an ancient vellum a fi, with the upper end of the s faint or blotted out, and an u or h would be distinguished with difficulty; and as to an Icel. transcriber þagsi was quite an unknown word, while 'þegn,' 'þagn' were familiar syllables, he would choose the latter; the vellum itself was lost soon after the copy had been taken in A. D. 1651. In Rb. (Isl. i. 385) the word has been paraphrased into 'þegja'; see the Academy, vol. i. p. 278.

ÞEIR, þær, þau. This is the plur. of the personal pron., answering to sing. hann, hún, þat; gen. þeirra and mod. þeirra; dat. þeim; acc. þá, þær, þau; in mod. speech þau is sounded þaug, which form occurs as early as Run. Gramm. of 1651, and often rhymes in mod. poets with words ending in g, e. g. þaug, þaug, Bb. 2. 17; [the A. S. uses the forms bi, bira, bim, bi, and so in early South. E., whereas the North. E. has ibay, ibair, ibaim; South. E. and Chaucer bi, bere, bem, Morris' Specimens, p. xv; Dan. de, deres, early Dan. deræ, dat. dem.]

A. Þeyr, ibem, ibeira (see Gramm. p. xxi); töluðu þeir mart, ríða þeir heim af þingi; þeir kómu í Fljótshlíð, Gunnar tók vel við þeim; Njáll mælti til þeirra . . ., slíkar fortölur hafði hann fyrir þeim, . . . þeir spurðu þær tíðenda, báðu þær eigi leyna, þær sögðu svá vera skyldu; at þeim muni illa sækjask at vinna oss, . . . yér getum þá eigi með vápnum sóttu, and so in endless instances.

2. a peculiarity of the Icel. is the constant use of the neut. plur. 'þau' as collective for a masc. and fem.; síðan gengu þau inn bæði (i. e. Njall and Bergthora), at hann skyldi breiða yfir þau húðina; börn þeirra þjála ok Rosku, ok gördusk þau . . . þá er þau höfðu gengit líða hrið, Edda 28; Ask ok Emblu . . . önd þau né áttu óð þau né höfðu, Vsp.; and so also of things, e. g. þau páll og reka; þau hönd og fótr, and so on.

B. Special usages; this pronoun is used collectively before the names of two or more persons, the neuter being used when the persons are of different sexes:

1. where more than one are expressly named; þau Asgerðr ok Þorstein, they, Asgerd and Thorstein, Eg. 702; þeir Starkaðr ok Þódr, ok Flosi, Nj. 282; börn þeirra Hildigunnar ok Kára, the children of H. and K., id.; synir þeirra Starkaðar ok Hallberu voru þeir þorgeirr ok Þórkell, 89; synir hans voru þeir Kolr ok Ottarr ok Haukr, id.; bræðr Hallgerðar voru þeir Þorleikr, fadír Bolla, ok Ólafr fadír Kjartans, ok Þódr, they, Thorleik, Olave, and Bard, 2; fadír þeirra Þorkels föður Brands, ok Þorgils föður mins, Jb. 20 (restored by Maurer; the emendation in the Editions is an error; the passage is parallel to that given above from Nj.); þótr ok þeir lagsmenn, Thor and they—his followers, Edda 28.

2. ellipt., as it seems, where the one part is understood, and not named; in this case the neut. þau is used whenever the name understood is different in gender; þeim Oddi, to Odd and his men, Fms. vi. 379; þeir Vagn, W. and his men; þeir Pálnatóki, P. and his men, xi. 95; þeir Þóroddr, . . . þeim Þóroddi, Hkr. ii. 251; frá skiptum þeirra Þórðar, the dealings of Thorð and Björn, Fms. iv. 110; þeir fedgar, they, father and son, Nj. 8; þau Asgerðr, Asgerd and her son, Eg. 702; vinátta var með þeim frændum þeirra, i. e. between him and their kinsmen, Grett. 132; þeirra bræðra, Fms. xi. 160; þeir í Orkneyjum, Nj. 270; af þeim (those) fyrir austan ámar, 210.—This use of the pronoun þeir, þær, þau is peculiar to the old Scand. and Icel. tongue, and is not found in any other Teut. language. We take it to be a remnant from an ancient time when the article was still used detached and not suffixed, being, as in Homeric Greek, used half as a demonstrative pronoun; thus Iliad viii. 457, αἰὲρ Ἀθηναίων τε καὶ Ἡρῶν, sounds quite Icel., þær Aþena og Hera; Icel. extend it also to the other cases, þeirra (gen.) Aþenu og Heru, þeim Aþenu og Heru; cp. also II. xiii. 496, 526; the usage of the neut., as above, seems peculiar to Icel. It is therefore an error to explain 'þeir þóroddr,' etc., as if a copula 'ok' had been dropped between the pronoun and the pr. name, þeir 'ok' þóroddr; it is in fact an elliptical abbreviated version of the usage in B. 1: similar is the use of hann and hún for the sing. (see hann B. II. p. 239, col. 1), and of Gr. εἰς in Od. xxi. 181.

C. For this pronoun as demonstrative, see þat, p. 731.

ÞESSI, fem. þessi, neut. þetta, a demonstr. pron.

A. THE FORMS.—The Icelandic, like other Teut. languages, except the Goth., has two demonstr. prons., one simple, sá rú þat, another emphatic or deictic, þessi, þetta (cp. Gr. ὁ and ἐκεῖ, Lat. hic and illic); the latter is a compound word, the particle -sá, sometimes changed into -sa, being suffixed to the cases of the simple pronoun; Dr. Egilsson, in Lex. Poët., first explained that this suffix was the imperative 'see,' Goth. sai; þess, as well as the Engl. this, these, those, is therefore q. s. þu-see, þu-see. The forms vary much:

I. the earliest declension is with the suffixed particle, like -gi in ein-gi, q. v., indeclinable; it is mostly so on the Runic stones, where we find the following forms,—dat. þeim-si (þuic-ee), Rafn 178; acc. þann-si (þuic-ee), passim; þa-si (þuic-ee); plur. þeir-si (þuic-ee); dat. þeim-si (þuic-ee); acc. þa-si (þuic-ee); neut. plur. þau-si (þuic-ee), passim; of this declension the vellums have only preserved the dat. sing. neut. þvi-sa, and the dat. masc. sing. and plur. þeim-sa. On the Runic stones the acc. masc. sing. and plur., the acc. fem. plur., and the acc. neut. plur. are, so to say, standing phrases—to raise 'this stone,' 'these stones,' or 'these kumbils' (neut. plur.), or to carve 'these Runes'; but the other cases can only be assumed from later forms; in the Runic inscriptions they are wanting, because there was no occasion for them; thus þvi-sa and þeim-sa are freq. in old Icelandic vellums, but are hardly met with in Runes. Even nom. sing. masc. and fem. sá-si (þuic-ee) and sú-si (þuic-ee) are said to occur in two or three Runic inscriptions.

II. the whole word was next turned into a regular adjective with the inflexion at the end, just like margr from mánn-gi, öngur from ein-gi, in which case the suffix became assimilated to the preceding pronoun, sometimes the inflexive s and sometimes the final letter of the pronoun prevailing; hence arose the forms as given in Gramm. p. xxi: a. the s prevailed in the forms þessi qs. þer-si; in þess-sa; in þessum qs. þeim-sum, þem-sum; runum þimsum (þuice lúris) occurs in Rafn 165, but is there erroneously explained; in þessu qs. þvi-su; acc. plur. þessa qs. þu-sa, þessar qs. þær-sar, þessi qs. þau-si. β. again, the final of the pronoun prevailed in þenna qs. þann-sa, þetta qs. þat-sa; so also in þenna, which stands for þenna, which again is an assimilation for þeim-sa or þeim-si.

2. the older form for gen. and dat. sing. fem., as also gen. plur., is bisyllabic (gen. þessa, dat. þessi, gen. plur. þessa); þessar messu, Hom. 41; þessar upp-rásar, Fms. i. 166; i þessi útleð, 78; af þessi sótt, ix. 390; til þessa saka, Grág. i. 324, and passim; hence, later, þessarrar, þessarri, þessarra; thus, þessarrar, MS. 544. 151; þessarri, Sks. 672 B; þessarrar, 786 B. and so in mod. usage.

III. a spec. form is þessor (q. v.), formed like nökkorr or engurr, but only used in nom. sing. fem. and nom. acc. neut. plur. (þessor þann, þessor orð); it seems to be a Norse form: [A. S. þes, pl. þæs; Engl. this, these; Hel. þese; O. H. G. deser; Germ. dieser; Dan.-Swed. denna is formed from the old acc. þenna; pl. disse.]

B. THE SENSE.—This, pl. these. For the usages see the writers passim; it suffices to observe, that þessi is used both as adjective and as substantive; as adjective it may be placed before or after its noun (þessu kona or kona þessi): ellipt. usages are, i þessu, in this moment, Fms. ii. 60; i þessi (viz. hríð), in this nick of time, x. 415. For its usage with the article inn, see hinn, p. 263, col. 1 (ll. 1); þessi inn skakk-borni, sveinn, Al. 29; þenna inn unga dreng, 656 C. 32, and passim.

PING, n. [no Goth. þigg is recorded; A. S. and Hel. þing; Engl. þing; O. H. G., Germ., and Dutch ding; Dan.-Swed. ting.]

A. A thing, Lat. res. In the Icel. this sense of the word is almost unknown, although in full use in mod. Dan.-Swed. ting, where it may come from a later Germ. influence.

B. As a law phrase [see þingvöllr]: I. an assembly, meeting, a general term for any public meeting, esp. for purposes of legislation, a parliament, including courts of law; in this sense þing is a standard word throughout all Scandinavian countries (cp. the Tyn-wald, or meeting-place of the Manx parliament): technical phrases, blása til þings, kveðja þings, stefna þing, setja þing, kenna þing (N. G. L. i. 63); helga þing, heyja þing, eiga þing; slita þingi, segja þing laust, to dissolve a meeting, see the verbs: so also a þing 'er fast' when sitting, 'er laust' when dissolved (fasti 1. 7, lauss II. 7); Dróttins-dag hinn fyrri í þingi, ríða af þingi, ríða á þing, til þings, vera um nótt af þingi, öndvert þing, ofanvert þing, Grág. i. 24, 25; nú eru þar þing (parliaments) tvau á einum þingvelli, ok skulu þeir þá fara um þau þing bæði (in local sense), 127; um vartit tóku bændr af þingit ok vildu eigi hafa, Vápn. 22; hann hafði tekit af Vöðla-þing, skyldi þar eigi sóknar-þing heita, Sturl. i. 141: in countless instances in the Sagas and the Grág., esp. the Nj. passim, lb. ch. 7, Gisl. 54-57, Glúm. ch. 24, 27, Eb. ch. 9, 10, 56, Lv. ch. 4, 15-17: other kinds of assemblies in Icel. were Leidar-þing, also called Þriðja-þing, Grág. i. 148; or Leid, q. v.; hreppstjórnar-þing (see p. 284); manntals-þing; in Norway, bygða-þing, D. N. ii. 330; hús-þing, vápnar-þing, reifi-þing, v. sub vocc.; —eccl. a council, H. E. i. 457, Ann. 1274; þing í Nicea, 415, 14. 2. a parish (opp. to a benefice); in Iceland this word is still used of those parishes whose priest does not reside by the church, no manse being appointed as his fixed residence; such a parish is called þing or þinga-braud (and he is called þinga-prestr, q. v.), as opp. to a 'beneficium', Grág. i. 471, K. þ. K. 30, 70, K. Á. passim; bóndi er skyldr at ala presti hest til allra nauðsynja í þingin, Vm. 73; tiundir af hverjum bónda í þingunum, 96, Bs. i. 330, H. E. ii. 48, 85, 128.

II.); a 'þing' was the political division of a country; hence the law phrase, vera í þingi með goða, to be in the district of such and such a goði, to be his liegeman, cp. þingfesti; or, segjask or þingi, see the Grág., Nj., and Sagas, passim; full goðorð ok foru þing, Grág. i. 15; í þvi þingi eðr um þau þing, 85. In later times Icel. was politically divided into twelve or thirteen counties. In old days every community or 'law' had its own assembly or parliament, whence the double sense of 'lög' as well as of 'þing.'

C. HISTORICAL REMARKS.—In Norway the later political division and constitution of the country dates from king Hacon the Good and his counsellors Thorleif the Wise and earl Sigurd. As king Harold Fair-hair was the conqueror of Norway, so was his son Hacon her legislator as also the founder of her constitution, and of her political division into 'þings'; for this is the true meaning of the classical passage,—hann (king Hacon) lagði mikinn hug á laga-setning í Noregi, hann setti Gulafjars-lög ok Frostafjars-lög, ok Heiðsævis-lög fyrst at upphafi, en ádr höfðu sér hverir fylkis-menn lög, Ó. H. 9; in Hkr. l. c. the passage runs thus—hann setti Gulafjars-lög með ráði Þorleifs spaka, ok hann setti Frostafjars-lög með ráði Sigurðar jarls ok annara þrænda þeirra er vitrastir voru, en Heiðsævis-lög hafði sett Hálfðan svarti, sem fyrr er ritað, Hkr. 349 new Ed. the account in Eg. ch. 57, therefore, although no doubt true in substance, is, as is so often the case in the Sagas, an anachronism; for in the reign of Eric 'Bloodaxe,' there were only isolated fylkis-þing, and no Gula-þing. In later times St. Olave added a fourth þing, Borgar-þing, to the three old ones of king Hacon (those of Gula, Frosta, and Heiðsævi); and as he became a saint, he got the name of legislator in the popular tradition, the credit of it was taken from Hacon, the right man; yet Sighvat the poet speaks, in his Bersúgils-vísur, of the laws of king Hacon the foster-son of Athelstan. Distinction is therefore to be made between the ancient 'county' þing and the later 'united' þing, called lög-þing (Maurer's 'ding-bund'); also almennt lög þing or almannu-þing, D. N. ii. 265, iii. 277; fjórðunga þing, ii. 282; alþingi, alls-herjar-þing. The former in Norway was called fylkis-þing, or county þing; in Icel. vár-þing, héraðs-þing, fjórðungs-þing (cp. A. S. sciregemot, a shiremote). Many of the old pre-Haconian fylkis-þing or shiremotes seem to have continued long afterwards, at least in name, although their importance was much reduced; such we believe were the Hauga-þing (the old fylkis-þing of the county Westfold), Fms. viii. 245, Fb. ii. 446, iii. 24; as also Þrændarness-þing, Arnarheims-þing, Kefseyjar-þing, Mork. 179.

II. In Iceland the united þing or parliament was called Al-þingi; for its connection with the legislation of king Hacon, see lb. ch. 2-5 (the chronology seems to be confused); again, the earlier Icel. spring þings (vár-þing), also called héraðs-þing (county þing) or fjórðunga-þing (quarter þing), answer to the Norse fylkis-þing; such were the Þórness-þing, Eb., Landn., Gisl., Sturl.; Kjálarness-þing, Landn. (App.); Þverár-þing, lb.; also called þingness-þing, Sturl. ii. 94; Húnavatns-þing, Vd.; Vöðla-þing, Lv., Band.; Skaptafells-þing, Nj.; Arnar-þing, Flóam. S.; þingskála-þing, Nj.; Hegrarness-þing, Glúm., Lv., Greit.; Múla-þing (two of that name), Jb. (begin.), cp. Grág. i. 127; Þorskafjarðar-þing, Gisl., Landn.; þingeyjar-þing, Jb.; further, Kraka-lækjar-þing, Dropl. (vellum, see Ny Fel. xxi. 125); Sunnudals-þing, Vápn.; þing við Vallna-laug, Lv.; þing í Straumfirdi, Eb.; Hvalseyar-þing, Gisl.; or þing í Dýrafirdi, Sturl.; Fjósatungu-þing, Lv.

III. In Sweden the chief þings named were Uppsala-þing, Ó. H.; and Mora-þing (wrongly called Múla-þing, Ó. H. l. c., in all the numerous vellum MSS. of this Saga; the Icelandic chronicler or the transcriber probably had in mind the Icel. þing of that name).

IV. in Denmark, Vebjarga-þing, Knytt. S.; Íseyrar-þing, Jómsv. S. V. in the Faroe Islands, the þing in Þórshöfn, Fmr.; in Greenland, the þing in Gardar, Fbr. VI. freq. in Icel. local names, þing-völlr, þing-vellir (plur.) = Tingwall, in Shetland; þing-nei, þing-eyrar, þing-ey, þing-eyri (sing.); þing-múli, þing-akálar, etc., Landn., map of Icel.; þing-holt (near Reykjavík).

ping-fostl, f. a law term, domicile in or allegiance to a þing-community. In the Icel. Commonwealth every franklin had to declare his allegiance to one of the priests, and to say of what community he was a member; yet the word was political rather than strictly geographical, for the 'þings,' like the 'godords,' were not strictly geographical divisions, Grág. i. 164; hence the phrase, spyrja at þingfesti e-s, to speak after a man's þingfesti, call on him to declare it, as also ganga við þ. e-s, to acknowledge one's þ. (of the priest), Grág. (Kb.) i. 3, 43, 132, Nj. 87; því at einu er rétt at hafa þingfesti í öðrum fjórðungi heldr enu er maðr býr, ef goða er þat lofat þeim at lögbergi at taka þrjúðungs-mann útan-fjórðungs, Grág. i. 165, which last passage is evidently a 'novella.'

Jb. 52. A census was taken (about A.D. 1100) in Iceland of all the franklins who had to pay the þing-tax, which shewed that there were at that time 4,500, cottagers and proletarians not included, Jb. 17; a man who paid no such tax could neither sit as 'neighbour' or judge, Grág. i. 50; ef bóndi á fé minna, en hann eigi þingfarar-kaupi at gegna, ok ..., K. þ. B. There was also a different use of 'þinn' in the vocat., viz. in addressing a person generally in connexion with some word of abuse; þinn heljar-karl, thou hell-carle! Fb. i. 212; þitt fölmenni! Fa. 36; þinn skelmir! 166; also placed after the noun, even with the suffixed article, hefir þú svíkt mik, hundrað þinn! Isl. ii. 176; mun sóli þinn nokkurum manni gríð gefa? Eb. 106; lydda þín, Krók. 7; also freq. in mod. Dan., Norse, and Swed., e. g. Dan. din bund! din skjelm! ditt afskum! In Norway, even in a sense of compassion, nú frys du í hel, ditt vesle ting! gakk heim-atte, din krok = thou, poor fellow! but more freq. as abuse, di saggal ditt naut! ditt stygge fæ! or it is even there extended to the first person, eg, min arming, I, poor thing! me, vaare stakarar = we, poor fellows! eg viste inkje þetta, min daare! Ivar Aasen's Norse Grammar, p. 332. 2. in cases other than the vocative, but much more rarely; viltu nú þiggja gríð? þá svarar jarl, eigi af hundinum þinum, not from thee, thou dog! Fms. vi. 323; af fretkarli þinum, Fa. 160; acc., er ek sé þik, frænda skömm þína ..., er ek ól þinn úvita, Krók. 7 new Ed.; skulu vér færa þinn úvin til heljar, Fms. vi. 212. 3. in old writers even in plur., but very rarely; hvi róa djöflar yðrir (ye devils!), fyrir oss í alla nótt, Fms. ix. 50.—We believe this 'þinn' as a vocative, to be not the possess. pron., but a compounded form of the pers. pron. 'þú' and the article 'inn,' þinn being qs. þinn, literally thou the ...! A strong, and almost conclusive, proof of this is that the uncontracted form actually occurs, and is used in exactly the same sense as the contracted 'þinn'; þú inn vandi slangi, thou the wicked scamp! Skíða R.; þú inn armi, thou the wretch! Ld. 326; þú inn mikli maðr, thou the great man! Eg. 488; vel þú hinn goði þjón og trúlyndi, Matth. xxv. 21; the full phrase was accordingly altered in one of two ways; either the article was dropped, þú goði og t. þjón, 20, or pronoun and particle were both contracted into one word, as above. The phrase, we may presume, at first could only have been used in the vocative (þinn!); but the origin being soon lost sight of, it was gradually extended to other cases (hundinum þinum); and even, esp. in mod. usage, to the other possessive pronouns (þínnir yðrir). Bearing this in mind, it is easy to understand why this usage is peculiar to the Scandinavian tongue, for although the possessive pronoun 'þinn,' thine, etc., is common to all Teutonic languages, the article 'inn' is peculiar to the northern languages, and therefore a word compounded with it would be so also. Analogous are the phrases, sé inn, þat it, þan in, þann iun ..., see p. 263, col. 1 (A. II). For another view, see Gram., Kleine Schr. iii. 256, and 271 sqq.

ÞORP, n. [Ulf. þaurp = dypós, once in Nebem. v. 16; A. S. and Hel. þorp; Old Engl. thorp; O. H. G. and Germ. dorf; Lat. turba is taken to be the same word; this word, we think, was originally applied to the cottages of the poorer peasantry crowded together in a hamlet, instead of each house standing in its own enclosure, like the 'tún' or 'bær' or 'garðr' of the 'búandi,' hence þorpari = a churl (see below); the etymological sense being a crowd, throng, as seen in þyrpast, þyrping (qq. v.), as also in Lat. turba]. 1. a hamlet, village, rarely of an isolated farm; fóru þau um kveldit í annat þorp skamt þaðan, ... þorsteinn hét þar bóndi, Hkr. i. 189 (in East-Norway), Fms. x. 219; margir voru búendr þar í þorpinu, O. H. 131; til Níðaróss, þar var þorp nokkurt sett ok kaupstaðr, Fms. x. 294; um þorp ok um bæi (Scotland), Orkn. 78; in Edda 108, þorp ef þrír eru, ... 2. when used of foreign countries it means a thorp or village; borgir, kastalar, þorp, Fms. vii. 94; þorp ok tún, Sks. 631; Írar hlaupta saman i eitt þorp, Ld. 78; borg eða þorp, Stj. 96, 183; þar (in Frisland) varð brátt fyrir þeim þorp eitt ok bygðu þar margir bændr, Eg. 528; Lat. villa is rendered 'þorp,' Róm. 132, Hom. (St.), (= Matt. xxii. 5); þorpin stóðu á bryggjunum ok mikil fjölmenni i þeim þorpum (of London), O. H. L. ch. 10; metaph., þættu-þorp, the abode of quarrel, i. e. the mouth, Fms. vi. (in a verse). 3.

The word occurs twice in poets in the same sense as in the Goth., a land; hrörnar þóll sú er stendr þorpi á, hlýrat henni búrkr né barr, Hm. 49 (here 'þorp' seems to mean a field, fenced place, or garden, as opp. to the 'wood'); þjár þjóðar falla þorp yfir meyja, Mugþrasir, three great rivers fall over the field of the Norms, Vfm. 49. II. very freq. as the second compd of Dan. local names, as -trup, or -rup dropping the t, Hos-trup, Kra-rup, Kolde-rup, Vins-trup, Sverð-rup; but in early Dan. -torp or -thorp, thus Bukke-thorp, Thume-thorp, Ny-thorp = mod. Dan. Nytrup, and in many names of places, see Dipl. Thorkel, passim; so also Engl. -thorp and Germ. -dorf; in Norway such local names are rare, in Iceland still more so, yet a þorpar, f. pl., occurs in western Iceland, in Stranda-ýsila, called 'i þorpum.' The reason is that in flat countries cottages lie closer together than in a mountainous country.

þorpari, a, m. a cottier, peasant, poor, churl, clown, of the lower peasantry; búandkarl eða þ., Fms. ii. 48; þorparar ok verkmenn, opp. to rikir búendr, O. H. 212; þorpari (opp. to hæverskr maðr), Sks. 276, 317; 'colonus' and 'miles gregarius' are rendered by þ., Róm. 132, 152; þorpara sonr, þorpari sveinn, a term of contempt, Fms. viii. 221, Fas. i. 150. 2. metaph. a villain, so in mod. usage. þorpara-ligr, adj. (-ligr, adv.), boorish, clownish, Hkr. iii. 129, Al. 119. þorpara-skapr, m. clownishness, Sks. 276; mod. villainy.

þorp-karl, m. = þorpari, a churl, Fms. x. 372, Þiðr. 231. þorpkarl-ligr, adj. churlish, Hkr. iii. 129.

ÞORR, a, m. ÞÓR-DUNN, u. f. a mod. poet. word, from Dan. torden, the din of Thor, i. e. thunder, Bjarni.

ÞÓRR, m., gen. ÞÓRS, dat. and acc. ÞÓR, but ÞÓRI dat., Bragi; in Runic inscriptions spelt ÞUR; [A. S. þunor; Engl. thunder; North. E. thunner; Dutch donder; O. H. G. donar; Germ. donner; Hel. thunar; Dan. tor, in tor-den; cp. Lat. tono and tonitrus; the word ÞÓR- is therefore formed by absorption of the middle n, and contraction of an older dissyllabic ÞOR into one syllable, and is a purely Scandinavian form; hence in A. S. charters or diplomas it is a sure sign of forgery when names compd with ÞUR- appear in deeds pretending to be of a time earlier than the Danish invasion in the 9th century; although in later times they abound; the Engl. Thurs-day is a later form, in which the phonetic rule of the Scand. tongue has been followed; perh. it is a North. E. form. There is a short essay by Jacob Grimm on the etymology of this word.]

A. The god Thor, the god of thunder, keeper of the hammer, the ever-fighting slayer of trolls and destroyer of evil spirits, the friend of mankind, the defender of the earth, the heavens, and the gods, for without Thor and his hammer the earth would become the helpless prey of the giants. He was the consecrator, the hammer being the cross or holy sign of the ancient heathen, hence the expressive phrase on a heathen Danish Runic stone, þurr vigi þessi runar, 'Thor, consecrate these Runes!' Rafn 193. Thor was the son of mother Earth; blunt, hot-tempered, without fraud or guile, of few words and ready stroke,—such was Thor, the favourite deity of the ancients. The finest legends of the Edda, and the best lays (the lays of Hymir, Thrym, and Harbard) refer to Thor, see the Edda passim, Eb. the first chapters—hann varðveitti þar í eyinni þórs-hof, ok var mikill vin þórs, . . . hann gekk til fréttar við þór ástvin sinn . . ., Eb.; Helgi var blandinn í trú, hann trúði á Krist, en hét á þór til sjófara ok harðræða, Landn. 206. For a head of Thor carved on the high-seat pillars, see Eb., Fbr.: or on a talisman, Fs. 97.

B. COMPS OF PROPER NAMES.—The name of Thor has always been thought to sound well, and is much used in pr. names; (hann átti) son er Steinn hét, þann svein gaf þórolf þór vin sínum ok kallaði þorstein, Eb.; uncompd only in the form ÞÓRIR of a man, ÞÓRA of a woman, but common in compds, where in mod. usage the vowel is sounded long before a vowel, and before b and d, elsewhere short, but in old times it was no doubt o throughout;—thus, as a prefix, ÞÓR-ÁLFR, ÞÓRÓLFR, ÞÓRARR, ÞÓR-ARINN, ÞÓR-ODDR, ÞÓR-HADDR, ÞÓR-HALLI, ÞÓR-HALLR; but ÞÓR-BERGR, ÞÓR-BJÖRN, ÞÓR-BRANDR, ÞÓR-FINN, ÞÓR-GAUTR, ÞÓR-GEIRR, ÞÓR-GESTR (ÞÓRGESTLINGAR, the family of Th., Eb.), ÞÓR-GRÍMR, ÞÓR-GILA, ÞÓR-GNÝR, ÞÓR-KELL (qs. ÞORKETILL), ÞÓR-LÁKR (sounded ÞOLLÁKR, Bs. i. 356, l. 18, and so in mod. usage), ÞÓR-LEIFR, ÞÓR-LEIKR, ÞÓR-LJÓTR, ÞÓR-MÓÐR, ÞÓR-MUNDR (Dan. Of all these names, three demand special mention, viz. ÞÓRÐR, being a contr. qs. ÞÓR-RÖÐR (as Bárðr = Bár-röðr), the old uncontr. form occurs in poems of the 10th century, e. g. ÞÓRÐR vinon óra, Korm. 132; so Sigvat calls his own father ÞÓRÐR (dissyll.), yet he makes it rhyme as if contracted (ÞORR er var fordum), so ÞORÐR skoruðu, Bjarn. (in a verse): the other name is ÞURÍÐR, a fem. name, a weakened form for ÞÓRÍÐR, Íb. 363 (qs. ÞÓR-RÍÐR, like Sig-ríðr); thirdly, ÞYRÍ, a fem. name, weakened from ÞÓR-VÉ, or still older ÞÓR-VEIG, mod. Dan. Týra, PRESKJA, t, priskja and pryskva are less correct forms; [Ulf. priskjan = ðakw; A. S. persecan; Engl. thrive; O. H. G. driscan; Germ. driscen; Swed. törskja; Dan. tærskja; Lat. tro; Gr. trépa];—to thrive, D. N. vi. 196; priskja (sic) korn, Fms. viii. 96 (pryskva, v. l.).

PRESKJÖLDUR, m. [this word is derived from preskja and völtr, and prep means a threshing-floor, because in ancient times the floor at the entrance was used for threshing, but it then came to mean the block of wood or stone beneath the door, doorsill or threshold; and that in ancient times it was so, is borne out by phrases as, Gríma sat á preskjöldi, Fbr.; or, stiga yfir preskjöldinn, Eb. l. c.; or, preskjöldinn var hárfyrir durum, O. H. L. 85; see the references. The latter part of the compd. -öldr, is from a time when the older ld had not as yet become assimilated into ll. The word is declined like völtr; nom. preskjöldr, or, dropping the j, preskjöldr; acc. preskjöld or preskjöld, Bs. i. 44, Fms. v. 140, Fbr. 14, Korm. 10, Eb. 220, Fs. 68, Edda ii. 122, Hkr. iii. 116, N. G. L. i. 18, 431; dat. preskjöldi, Fms. ii. 149, Fbr. 98 new Ed., N. G. L. i. 18, 431; in rhymes elðhúss preskjöldi, Kormak; nom. plur. preskjöldir, Bs. i. 736; acc. preskjöldu, Stj. 436 (spelt prescavöldu); examples are wanting of gen. sing. and plur. 2. but as the etymology was forgotten, the forms soon got confused, e.g. the curious various readings to N. G. L. ii. 110, preskjöldi, preskjald, preskald, preskalla, preskjöldi, preskjöldi, preskjöldi, all dat.; acc. sing. changing ö into e, preskjöld, Stj. 436 (Cod. A); dat. changing e into i, preskjöldi (as if from skjöldr), H. E. i. 496, N. G. L. ii. l. c. The form preskjöldr, found in mod. Icelandic books, is a bad attempt at an etymology, as if it were derived from prep and skjöldr. The form tréskjöldrinn, O. H. L. 85, l. 21, is prob. merely a scribe's error. 3. at last came the mod. form preskjöldr, declined as a regular substantive (like Höskjöldr), Sturl. iii. 33; [A. S. persecold or periscold; Engl. thresbold; Dan. tærskel; O. H. G. dirscvelli.]

ÞÚSUND, f.; sérhverja þúsund, Stj. 298; á þúsund (dat.), Sks. 705; tvær þúsundir, þúsundir, 623. 53; in mod. usage it is mostly neut. (influenced by Latin?), but also fem. It is spelt þús-hund, Barl. 53; þús-hundum, Fms. vi. 409 (v.l.); Geisli 49; another form þús-hundrað (q.v.) is freq., esp. in Stj., Barl.; this double form -hund and -hundrað answers to the equally double form of 'hundred,' see p. 292, and is a proof that þúsund is a compound word, the latter part of which is 'hund' or 'hundred;' the etymology of the former part 'þús' is less certain; it is, we believe, akin to þysja, þyss, þaus-nir (a lost strong verb þúsa, þaus, þusu); þúsund would thus literally mean a swarm of hundreds: [in Goth. the gender varies, þūsundi, pl. þūsundjos = χίλιοι, or þūsundja, neut.; A.S. þásund; Engl. thousand; O.H.G. dasunta; Germ. tausend, q. tausend; Swed. tusende and tusen; Dan. tusinde; Dutch tusend: this word is also common to the Slavonic languages: again, the Lapp. dubab and Finn. tubat are no doubt borrowed from the Slavonic or Scandinavian; the Gr., Lat., and Sansk. use other words]:—a thousand.

B. There is little doubt that with the ancient heathen Scandinavians (and perhaps all Teutons), before their contact with the civilised southern people, the notion of numbers was limited, and that their thousand was not a definite number, but a vague term, denoting a swarm, crowd, host (cp. the Gr. μυρία): in ancient lays it occurs thrice (Hkv., Em., Fas. i. 502), but indefinitely; hvat þrym er þar sem þúsund biðisk eðr mengi til mikit, what a din is there as if a thousand were speaking, or an over-mickle multitude, Em. 2; sjau þúsundir, Hkv. i. 49, literally = seven thousands, but in fact meaning seven hosts of men.

2. the dat. pl. þúsundum is, like hundruðum, used adverbially = by thousands, in countless numbers, Fms. vi. 409 (in a verse), Geisli 49. 3. in the ancient popular literature, uninfluenced by southern writers, 'þúsund,' as a definite number, occurs, we think, not half-a-dozen times. As the multiple of ten duodecimal hundreds, ere the decimal hundred was adopted, 'þúsund' would mean twelve decimal hundreds; and such is its use in the Sverris Saga, Fms. viii. 40, where one vellum says 'tvær þúsundir,' whilst the others, by a more idiomatic phrase, call it 'twenty hundreds.'

II. in ecclesiastical writers, and in annals influenced by the Latin and the like, it is frequent enough; tíu þúsundir, fjórtán þúsundir, Fms. i. 107, 108 (annalistic records); fimn þúsundir, xi. 386, Al. 111; tíu þúsundum, Sks. 705; tíu þúsundum sinna hundrað þúsunda, Hom.; þúsund þúsunda, a thousand of thousands, i.e. a million, (mod.); hundrað þúsundir rasta ok átta tígir þúsunda, ... hundrað þúsund mílna, Fb. i. 31 (in the legend of Eric the Far-traveller and Paradise, taken from some church-legend); fjórar þúsundir, Þidr. 234; or of the years of the world, sex þúsundir vetra, Fs. 197; sjau þúsundir vetra, Landn. 34.

C. REMARKS.—The popular way of counting high numbers was not by thousands, but by tens (decades) and duodecimal hundreds as factors; thus ten ... twenty hundreds, and then going on three, four, five, six ... tens of hundreds (a 'ten of hundreds' being = 1000). The following references may illustrate this—tíu hundruð, ellefu hundruð, tólf hundruð, þrettán hundruð, fimntán hundruð ..., Íb. 17, O.H. 119, 201, Fms. vii. 295, xi. 383, 385. From twenty and upwards—tuttugu hundrað manna, twenty hundreds of men, Fms. vii. 324, viii. 40; hálfir þríðir tugi hundraða skipa, two tens and a half hundreds of ships, i.e. twenty-five hundreds, Fas. i. 378; þrjá tigu hundraða manna, three tens of hundreds of men, Fms. viii. 311; var skorat manntal, hafði hann meirr enn þrjá tigu hundraða manna, vii. 304; þrír tígir hundraða, D.N. v. 18; nær fjórir tígir hundraða manna, nearly four tens of hundreds of men, Fms. vii. 275; á fimta tigi hundraða, on the fifth ten of hundreds, i.e. from four to five tens of hundreds, viii. 321; sex tígir hundraða, six tens of hundreds, 311, xi. 390; sex tigu hundraða manna, Fb. ii. 518, D.I. i. 350,—all odd amounts being neglected. The highest number recorded as actually reckoned in this way is 'six tens of hundreds' (fimmtán tígir hundraða, fifteen tens of hundreds, Fms. viii. 321, v.l., is a scribe's error); it is probable that no reckoning exceeded twelve tens of hundreds. All high multiples were unintelligible to the ancients; the number of the Einherjar in Valhalla is in the old lay Gm. thus expressed,—there are 'five hundred doors in Valhalla, and five tens beside (the 'five tens' are, by the way, merely added for alliteration's sake), and eight hundred Einherjar will walk out of each door when they go out to fight the Wolf' (on the Day of final Doom). There seems to have been some dim exaggerated notion of a definite thousand in an ancient lay, only preserved in a half alliterative prose paraphrase, Fas. i. 502, where a mythical host is given thus,—there were thirty-three phalanxes, each of five 'thousand,' each thousand of thirteen hundreds, each hundred four times counted. The armies in the battle of Brawalla, the greatest of the mythical age, are given, not in numbers, but by the space the ranks occupied, Skjöld. S. ch. 8. This resembles the story in O.H. ch. 59, of the two young brothers, king's sons: when asked what they would like to have most of, the one said: 'Cows.' 'And how many?' 'As many,' said he, 'as could stand packed in a row round the lake (Mjösen in Norway) and drink.' 'But you?' they asked the other boy: 'House-carles' (soldiers), said he. 'And how many?' 'As many,' said he, 'as would in one meal eat up all my brother's cows.' Add also the tale of the King and the Giant, and the number of the giant's house-carles, Maurer's Volksagen 306. No less elementary was the rule for division and fractions, of which a remarkable instance is preserved in an ancient Icelandic deed, called Spákonu-arfr, published in D.I. i. 305. See also the words tigr, hundrað, skor, skora, and the remarks in Gramm. p. xix. The Homeric numeration, as set forth in Mr. Gladstone's Homeric Studies, vol. iii, p. 425 sqq., is highly interesting, and bears a striking resemblance to that of the ancient Scandinavians. We may notice that in Iceland land and property are still divided into hundreds (hundreds of eils = 120), see hundrað B; in this case a thousand is never used, but units and hundreds of hundreds as factors, thus, sex tugu hundraða, in Reykh. Máld. (a deed of the 12th century), and so still in mod. usage; a wealthy man of the 15th century is said to have bequeathed to his daughters in land, 'tölf hundruð hundraða ok ellefu-tíu og tvau hundruð betr, en í lausafé fimn hundruð hundraða,' i.e. twelve hundreds of hundreds and 'eleventy' and two hundreds, and in movables five hundreds of hundreds, Feðga-xfi 16 (by the learned Bogi Benediktsson of Stáðar-fell in Iceland, A.D. 1771–1849); sjau hundruð hundraða og þrjátígi hundruð betr, 21; hann eptir-lét börnunum sínum fjárumuni upp á ulu hundruð hundraða, 22,—a proof that in very remote times, when this valuation of land first took place, 'thousand' was still unknown as a definite number.

Æ (CE)

THIS is a double letter—æ, compounded of a and e (a + e), being a kind of appendage to a, and æ, compounded of o and e (o + e), being an appendage to o. In the alphabet of Thorodd the former was marked g, the latter d, as in væn, fætr; later, the accent was dropped. The æ is also written æ, o, æ, or even o or eo, thus fæti, fæti, fæti, or corri = cætti, whence in modern print æ, o; most vellums write æ (a + e) and æ (o + e) respectively, which characters have been adopted in modern print. In Icel. the æ-sound was soon lost; only the earliest vellums distinguish the two sounds; then in later vellums g, o are used indiscriminately, the difference in sound being lost, the characters remaining, till at last the useless sign disappeared. Almost all the Icel. Sagas are preserved in vellums later than the time when the sounds had become confounded; the Cod. Reg. of the Grág. still keeps the distinction, owing probably to its excellent old originals; the Cod. Reg. of the Sæm. Edda uses both signs, but misplaces them, thus, Hm. 92 mæla, but for (pres. from fá), in the same verse. The confusion between æ and o is purely Icelandic, for in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden the distinction has been preserved up to the present day, thus, Dan. brødre, Swed. bröder, döttr, fæder, bøne, but sæde, nætt, læge, etc., Icel. bræðr, dætr, fætr, hæna, sæti, nætr, læknir, etc. The æ was sounded ē (as Germ. ä, in näbe, or a lengthened Engl. a, perhaps more protracted), this sound was still heard down to the time of Ami Magnusson (end of the 17th century), see Gramm. p. xxxv, col. 2; it is now sounded like Engl. long i (time), but this sound was unknown to the ancients, except in the intersection ai (= a, see below)—we can only guess at the sound of æ; judging from the analogy of æ, it may have been like Germ. böbe, Fr. feu, only more protracted; in a diphthongal form (like æ into ai) it would be oi, and indeed the word œli in its modern form auli (i. e. oili) may be a relic of this. Æ cannot be sounded before æ, being a u-sound; thus we have œðr, œða, from væða, œðr; but before æ, being an a-sound, it is both sounded and written. For the umlaut see Gramm. p. xxix.

Æ, adv.; in vellums also spelt o, i. e. = o; e hværr, Blanda; þess Guðs er lífr ok e man lífa, Blanda; en, ca standa mér augu of eld til Gunnildar, Ágrip (in a verse); freq. ey and ei, see ei, p. 117; [Goth. aiw in ni-aiw = never; A. H. G. achten; the Northern languages use none of these words, but only the derivative ætla; an old Germ. abtilon would answer to Icel. ætla; Scot. ettle.]

B. To think, mean, suppose; jarl ætlaði þat, at þær myndi blóta, Blas. 45; munu þeir ætla at vér hafim ríðit austr, Nj. 206; forvitni er mér á, hvað þú ætlar mér í skapi þúa, Lv. 16; hann ætlaði kenni líf en sör dauða, he etled (expected) life for her, but death for himself, Sturl. iii. 190 C; ekki er til þess at ætla, segir hann, at ek mona skipask við orð ein saman, Fms. xi. 38; ekki þarftu til þess at ætla at ek ganga við frændsemi þinni, 61; verði þér nú at ætla hvárt-veggja, think of both things, Sks. 285; ef ek á svá mikil vald á þér sem ek ætla, Nj. 10.

Cor. In the verse of Sighvat (Fms. vi. 43) 'ætla' is, we believe, a corruption for 'Atla', pr. name of a Norse Lagan in Gula, mentioned in Fms. x. 401 (Agrip ch. 29), and in N. G. L. i. 104; but it is now hardly possible to restore the whole verse, which had already been corrupted in tradition, so that when the compiler of Magnús Saga quoted it, he did not make out the full sense of it. The true context has been pointed out by Maurer in Abhandl. der k. Bayer. Acad. der W. 1872.

ætlan or ætlan, f. thought; eptir ætlan, deliberately, Sks. 119 new Ed.; er þat mikil ætlan (a great instinct) skynlausar skepu at sjá, 12 new Ed.; hogson ok ætlan, thought and reason, Mar.

ætr, adj. [eta, át], eatable, Hkr. ii. 252, Grág. ii. 122, 192, Bárð. 176; ú-ætr, uneatable.

ÆTT, f., like sætt (q. v.), the forms vary between átt and ætt; in old writers the latter form is by far the more common; in mod. usage they have been separated, átt meaning a quarter in a local sense, ætt a family: [ætt is akin to Ulf. aita = τὰ ἑσπέρια; A. S. æte = property; Early Engl. agte; Germ. achte = patrimony; the root verb is eiga, átti, like mega, mátt; from this original sense are derived both the senses, ætt = a family, and ætt or átt = Scot. 'air', 'regio caeli'; the etymology of átt from átta (eight), suggested at p. 47, col. 1, is too fanciful.]

Cor. Genealogies (ættir, ættar-tölur, ætt-vísi) form the ground-work of the old Icel. historiography; the ancient Saga-men delighted in them, and had a marvellous memory for lineages; in the Sagas the pedigrees give the clue by which to trace the succession of events, and supply the want of chronology. Whole chapters in the best Sagas, esp. at the beginning of a work, are set apart for genealogies, thus, Nj. ch. i. 19, 20, 25, 26, 46, 57, 96, 97, 114, 115, 155, as also 47, 57, 58, 106 (begin.), Eb. ch. i. 7, 8, 12, 65, Ld. ch. i. 31, 32, Eg. ch. 23, Guðf. ch. 1, Dropl. S. ch. 1-3, Þorst. hv. ch. 1-3, Þorst. Saga St. (the end), Rafn S. (the end-chapter), Flóam. S. ch. 1 (and esp. the end-chapter), Hánsa þ. S. ch. 1, Gisl. S. pp. 8, 9, Vapn. S. ch. 3, Isl. i. 353-363 (Biskupa-ættir), Guðm. S. ch. 1, Árna b. S. ch. 1, þórd. S. hr. new Ed. (at the end), Fagrsk. 144-148, Orkn. S. ch. 39, 59. In the Sturlunga S. the initial chapters (Sturl. i. 44-55, with which the work of Sturla begins) are devoted to the tracing the families of that time; so also Sturl. i. 202-206, iii. 96, 97. But the chief store-house for genealogical knowledge is the Landnám, which contains about 5000 pr. names, of which perhaps a third are names of women.

Ö (Ø)

This letter properly consists of two vowels, different in sound and in origin; an o-vowel, an 'umlaut' of a, and nearly related to it; and a u-vowel, nearly related to the letters o, u, and y: in modern Danish these two ö-sounds are still distinguished in pronunciation, the one being open almost like Engl. i before r, as in fir, the other closed like eu in French feu: Rask and Petersen, the founders of the philology of the Danish tongue, were the first to give separate symbols for these two sounds; the first they marked ö, the second ø (börn, bære). The modern Icel. knows only one sound, answering to the Danish ö; but that it was not so in old days may be proved from the vellums and from the grammarians. Thorodd marks the two sounds respectively by o and ø. Most of the vellums are very loose in their spelling, marking at random o, ø, au, u, ø (oll, øll, aull, øll): phonetically ø stands exactly in the same relation to æ, the umlaut of ó, as ö to o, the umlaut of á, so that ø and ö are the short, æ and o respectively the corresponding long vowels; ø and ö, æ and o being two pairs of sounds, just as are o ó, u ú; cp. 'Godfrði' and 'göð frði', Skálda, Thorodd: in very old vellums, e. g. the Rb. Cod. 1812, the ø is often marked eo, thus keomr = kømr, coxu = øxu = yxu, geora = gjóra or góra: in Norse vellums ø is often written æ, e. g. smær = smjör, confounding the two sounds, ø and æ. A few good vellums keep the distinction in the main, not as Thorodd's alphabet does, but generally by writing ey for ø (this must not be confounded with the diphthong ey); among those vellums are the Cod. Reg. of Sæm. Edda, the Cod. Acad. of the Hkr. (now lost), the Cod. Fris., the (lost) vellum of Rafns S. (see Bs. i. pref. lxix), although none of them strictly follows the rule; only a few Editions (e. g. Prof. Unger's Edit. of the Hkr.) have tried to observe the distinction; most Editions print ö throughout. We shall now try to give a list of the chief words and forms which have the ø. The chief guide in doing this is twofold, the ey of the vellums and the change of ø into e or í, by which a triple form arises, ø, ey, and e, of which ø and ey, no doubt, are mere variations:

I. the ø is either, 1. the umlaut of o; in the plurals, þórir seynir senir, hnótr hnetr, stöðr stöðr (sonr, hnetr, stöð): in the compar. and superl., nórðri neyrðri nerðri, þórrtr neyrtrtr nertrtr, ófri efri, óstr efstr (from nórðr, of): in the subj., þórrþi þerði, þóðli þeyðli (Fms. viii. 380), móndi (from þora, þola, monu or munu), þjóggi þeyggi, þjóggi þeyggi (from búa, þjoggu, högga, þjoggu): the presents, kømr, tröðr trøyðr tröðr, þófr sefr (from koma, tröða, sofa): the prets., frøri freyrri freri, gnøri gneyri gneri, søri seri, søri sleri, røri reyri reri, kjøri keyri keri, snøri sneyri sneri, grøri greyri greri (see Gramm. p. xxiii): the words þðli cyðli edli, þðla (a lizard) cyðla edla, høllzti heyhlti hellzti: in -røðr (Godfrðr, see Thorodd), -frøðr -freyðr -frøðr (Hallfrøðr Hallfrøyðr Hallfrøðr), hnøri hneyri hneri, þøn eyxn exn, køri keri (a probe), kjøri (a choice) keyr ker, kjøptr keyptr keptr kjaptr: þendi eytendi erendi the prefix particle, þr- eyr- er-: the words kjøt kjet, smjör smær, mjöl mél (prop. køt, smøt, møt), gøsemar gersemar, ørr and eyrr, a sear, Fms. viii. 275, v. l.; hrøf and hreyr, heyrum and hørum (p. 261, col. 2).

2. in the case of roots in -ui or -uj, where both v and j struggle for the umlaut, the result is an ø; in this case even a radical a changes into ø (this was for the first time observed by the late Danish scholar Lyngbye), thus, gørra geyrra gera (from garvian), gørr geyrr gerr (= ready), gørrvi gerri, gørrsemi gersemi, þæ eyx ex (Goth. aywau), þørr seyri. This is esp. freq. in those roots which have g or k for the middle consonant, in which cases the root vowel, either a or i, changes into ø; as in the verbs søkva, sökkva, sökkva, hrökkva, klökkva, sþongva, hoggva, hmoggva, þrøngva; in the adjectives, ðökktr, nökkviðr, gleggtr, hnøggtr, snøggtr; similarly with the orthography ey for ø, — eyggr (caedo), Am. 39; deyqva hramms, Skv. 2. 20; at kleveqvi Guðrun, Am. 58; klecqua, Akv. 24; hvi er þer steyt ór landi, Hkv. Hjörv. 31; nú mun hön seygva, Vsp. 62; seycstu nú gýgr (sink thou now!, Helt. 14; sleyngdi þvá silfri, Am. 46; steyccr lúðr tyrir, Hkv. 2. 2; sýtir æ glæyggr við gjöfum, Hkv. 48; gleyggr, Skv. 1. 7; gleggtr, 291; neykðan (nudum), Am. 49; neycqvðr, Hm. 49; Reyggr = böggvir, Ls. 45; røkvíð and rekvíd, Hkv. Hjörv. 35, Bugge (pref. ix); reykr = røkr, Fms. iv. 70: the word rekka (a bed) is also spelt reykka, and even rjukja, Art. (Ed. Kölbj.) 64; vekka and vøkvi. Phonetically connected with this change, but in a reverse order, is the change in the words nekkverr nökkurr nokkurr and eingi öngv öngvan, etc. In all the above instances the ey means ø, and is merely substituted for that sound, and is accordingly altogether different from the diphthong ey, see p. 114, col. 2, l. 15 sqq.

3. one may also assume an ø in the few instances where jö and jo, and jo and y interchange; in mjöl and mjolk (milk), mjok or mjök and nykill, þjokkr and þykktr, mjörkvi and myrkvi. This ø of the ancient tongue is the parent of the e in several modern words and forms, e. g. in the presents, sefr, kemr, treðr, heggtr, sekktr, stekkr, hrekkr; in the preterites, greri, sneri, reri; the compar., efri, efstr, helztr; in gera, erindi, freraz, and frøðinn: so also in the words kæt, mél, smær; and in inverse order, in nökkurr, in öngvir, öngvan, öngum, from einginn; cp. Dan. sem for ann. Ö The close phonetic relation between ö and y is shown by the fact that g or k before an ö was sounded as an aspirate, thus, göra, köt, köri, sounded göra, kjöt, kjöri, and more lately spelt with a j, analogous to gjeta, kjár, = gata, kær, for the j in these words is not radical.

II. for the o see Gramm. p. xxix, col. 2, and the introduction to letter A, p. 1. Runolf, in his Gramm. Island. of A. D. 1650, distinguishes between o longum (o), o breve (o), and o brevissimum (ö).

Önd-vegi and önd-ugi, n. [from and- (opposite) and vegr]:—

opposite-seat*, high-seat, so called because two seats are placed opposite to one another; in ancient timbered halls the benches were placed longways, running along the walls of the halls (see bekkr), with the two seats of honour in the middle facing one another; the northern bench facing the sun, was called öndvegi it æðra, the higher or first high-seat, the opposite or southern bench being it íðæra, the lower or second high-seat; the two high-seats were the most honoured places in the hall, and a chief guest used to be placed in the southern high-seat. In England the master and mistress sitting opposite one another at each end of the table may be a remnant of this old Scandinavian custom. The sides of the high-seat were ornamented with uprights (öndugis-súlur) carved with figures, such as a head of Thor or the like; these posts were regarded with religious reverence; many of the settlers of Iceland are said to have taken the high-seat posts with them, and when near Iceland to have thrown them overboard to drift ashore, and where they found them, there they took up their abode. When a man of rank died, the son, after all rites performed, solemnly seated himself in his father's seat, as a token of succession: in Vd. ch. 23, the sons sat not in the father's seat before they had avenged his death.

ÖR- (i. e. ør-), a prefixed particle, altered from us-; the s remains in usall = vesall, see p. 699, col. 2; also spelt er-, er-vita, Hkv.; or eyr-, eyr-grynna, Ó. H. 106; eyr-lygi, Eg. (in a verse): [Ulf. us-; O. H. G. ur-; when uncomposed, see ör, mod. úr, p. 472; as a prefix to nouns, ör- or or-, for which see p. 469, col. 2. Indeed, there is a strong probability that the negative prefix ö- is a contraction, not of un-, but of or-, so that ö-bætr is from or-bætr, ö-verðr from or-verðr, by agglutination of r, whereby the vowel becomes long (as the O. H. G. prefix ar- in A. S. appears as á-): this would account for the fact, that in the very oldest and best vellums there is hardly a single instance of ö- for or-, and this is the sole modern form not only all over Iceland, but also in most popular idioms of Norway and Sweden; a farther proof is that in many words or-, the ancient form, is preserved in a few vellums, especially of the Norse laws, in such rare forms as ör-sekr, ör-bættilligr, ör-vænt, and ö-vænt, where the current form is ö-sekr, etc.; so also, ör-keypis and ö-keypis, ör-grynna and ö-grynna, ör-höf and ö-höf. Therefore or-, not un-, is, we believe, the phonetical parent of the later Scandinavian negative prefix ö-. The extensive use of ör- and the utter absence of ö- or un- may be explained by the supposition that, for the sake of uniformity, all words beginning with ör- and un- gradually took the same form; for though in ancient days ör- was more extensively used than it is at present, it can hardly have been the sole form in all words now beginning with ö-:—ör- is used as denoting a negative, as ör-grynna, a being bottomless; or lack or loss of, as ör-sekr, out of being sekr; ör-verðr.

Pét. speaks of heitar 'ábistor'.

This sense is clearly seen from an old Icel. hymn of the 17th century.—nyti eg ei náðar þinnar . . . yrdi rás æfi minnar ámynt og skuggi rýr, but for thy grace the race of my life would be like a vain shadow, Hymn-book (1746, p. 448).

barn-gjarn, adj. eager for bairns, Gsp. bastarðr, m., cp. the remarks on basingr, p. 92, col. 1 at bottom, to which add.—This word is, we believe, derived from báss, a 'boose', stall, Goth. bansts; its original sense would then be, one born in a stall or crib; hence as a law term, a bastard; heruungr from horn (a corner) is an analogous term, cp. Germ. winkel-kind, for in ancient Teut. laws and language the bastard or outcast was considered as being born in an out-of-the-way place. Both words, bastarðr and basingr (q. v.), are, we believe, one in sense and origin, bastarðr being the older form, basingr the later; from Goth. bansts was formed bastarðr, qs. banstarðr; in Norway and Icel. bansts dropped the t and absorbed the n into the preceding vowel, and became bás-s; from this 'báss' was formed basingr, with ingr as inflexive syllable, and the vowel changed; whereas bastarðr, we suppose, dates from an early time before vowel-change had taken place.

Both words are law terms, the former Normannic (or Frankish), the latter Norse: both occur as the name of a sword,—besings in the mythical tale, Fb. ii., of St. Olave's sword, ere it was taken out of the cairn; bastardr in Fms. vii. (12th century), perhaps a sword of Norman workmanship. Literally bastardr means 'boose-bardy,' the bardy one of the stall, the bastard being the boy who got all kinds of rough usage, and so became hardy; we catch an echo of this in the words of the old lay—köðu 'hardan' njök 'horuung' vera, Hdm. 12.

ekkja, u, f, a widow, add—this word (as well as ekkill = Swed. enkling) is no relation to ekki = sobbing, but is derived from einn, one, and an inflexive -ka, like in stúlka, see Gramm. p. xxxii. col. 2. Ekkja originally meant a single woman, a damsel, and is thus used by the ancient poets, e. g. vara sem unga ekkju í öndugi leyssa, Km.; út munu ekkjur líta allanúðla þrúðar, Sighvat; 'ekkja' and 'ung kona' are synonymous, Isl. ii. (Gunn.) in a verse; ekkjan stendr ok undrask áraburð, Lex. Poët. It then came to mean a widow (a single, lone woman, having lost her husband). Ekkja is a word peculiar to all Scand. languages, old and modern; although, as we believe, it superseded a still older 'widuwo' (cp. the Goth., Germ., and Engl.); this change took place at so early a time that no traces are found of that word anywhere in Scand. speech or writing (cp. If so, it is hardly to be doubted that the division into Rapes existed even in heathen times; and indeed it would have been recorded by Ari in the 1b. had it been made in the time of the first bishops. The word itself and the autumn meetings for the poor are mentioned in Sagas referring to the heathen age, e. g. Fms. ii. 225. The men of the 12th century looked on these meetings as a time-honoured institution, as is proved by the reference Fb. iii. 431 (only lately noticed, and given in full s. v. þinga); cp. also Bolla þ. kol-folla, d. (and kol-fellir, m.), to lose utterly, of a man who loses all his live stock from cold or hunger; hann kolfeldi, he lost his all; það varð kolfellir: it may be a metaph. from cutting wood for charcoal; or perhaps a remnant of an ancient Scand. law term, preserved in early Swed., viz. kull-svarf = the death of mother and child in childbirth, and kjöl-svarf = of husband, wife, and child, all perishing at sea, see Schlyter, cp. Ld. ch. 18.

koma, the verb, D, at the end add.—vera kominn upp á e-n, to depend upon one for help; vera upp á aðra kominn, (mod.)

konr, add.—konar (generis), Skálda (Thorodd) ii. 40.

korn, add.—eitt köku-korn; see kaka.

kreppingr, m. a bird, the creeper (?), Edda (Gl.)

kriari, a, m. a crier, = Lat. præco, Mar. (pref. p. xvii).

kross, in the remarks on cross-worship add.—þorkell er svá baðsk fyrir at krossi, gott ey gömlum manni, gott ey ungum manni, Landn. 45.

krýja or krúa, ð, hence the mod. Icel. grúa (það úir og grúir), changing ð into g; [Norw. krye; cp. Engl. crowd];—to swarm; það uði og krúði, Egilsson's Poems, 25.

krökil-blinda, u, f. 'crook-blind,' blind man's buff; a game also called skolla-leiur, Mar. 1056.

kveisa, u, f., add.—kveisu-flug, n. a shooting pain, Mkv.

kvenn-, the compds, p. 362, col. 2, observe—the ancients prob. said kven- with a single n; 'kven' is still sounded in Kven-grjótt, a local name in western Icel., being the only remnant of the old form.

kviðja, the verb, add.—reflex. kviðisk þessa verks, forbear to do it, Krók. 6 new Ed.

kvika, u, f. obstructions of the ducts in the nose, which used to be thought to be quick (i. e. live) worms; Vespasianus hafði kvikur í nösum, en þat mein kalla þeir 'vespas', því var hann kallaðr Vespasianus, V. bad 'worms in the nose,' so which disease they call vespas, therefore he was called V. (sic), Post. (Unger) 155.

kvisi, u, f. a kind of bird, Edda ii. 488.

kvíatr, m., add,—kvíatr kvíatr, live stock; hann á eigi meir í kvikum kvísti en eina kú, Mar. 1049.

kyrfa, ð, to carve, Grág. ii. 257; cp. kurfur.

kyrra, u, f. calmness, calm, Mar. 1195.

kögör, m. a kind of stone, Edda (Gl.) ii. 424.

kögurr, m., as to the reference Hbl. 13, add,—the vellum has ogur, but the emendation into kögur is received by Editors; and is made certain by 'kögur-veinn' in the same verse; but the sense and origin of kögur in this place have been missed by the interpreters. It is indeed a well-known Teut. word, A. S. cocur, O. H. G. cocbar, Germ. koobar, Dutch koker; the Dan. kogger is prob. borrowed from the Germ., as is the Icel. koffur from Luther's Bible; once on a time it was also a Scand. word, which was since displaced by the compounded örva-malr or ör-malr, q. v.; this passage being the only place where it occurs in an uncompounded form, but it remains in kögur-veinn, a quiver-boy, who carried the bunter's quiver (?); and in kögur-barn, Norse kogge-barn. Prof. Bergmann has, with his usual insight in Eddic matters, divined the sense when he says, p. 123, 'über den Sund zu schwimmen und dabei seinen feurigen Donner-und-blitz-keil, ... im Wasser zu netzen und abzukühlen.' The fact is, Thor is here represented carrying a quiver full of thunder-bolts on his back, and so the poet makes the mighty thunder-god stop at the Sound, embarrassed, and begging to be ferried over, as he could not wade over from fear of wetting his quiver and quenching the fire, for he must 'keep his powder dry,' although in Grm. and Pd. Thor is not much afraid of the water. Whether kögurr, a quilt, be any relation to kögurr, a quiver, we cannot tell, prob. not; if so, this word should be placed under a separate head.

kör-loginn, adj. = körlogr, Post. 40.

laga-setning, f. legislation (p. 370, col. 1); this word requires explanation,—in old writers it means the constitution, the fundamental laws or political constitution of a commonwealth; as Ari, the historian, says, 'frá Islands bygd, frá landnáms-mönnum ok lagasetning,' of the settlement of Iceland, of her settlers and her political constitution, Ib. (pref.); where lagasetning refers to the institution of the alþing, and the other events related in Ib. ch. 2 and 3; so also, ritaði hann (viz. Ari) mest í upphafi sinnar bókar um Islands bygd (the settlements), ok lagasetning (constitution), Hkr. (pref.), referring to the constitutional laws of Ulfhot recorded in ch. 2 of the Icelander Book; lagasetning here exactly answers to what Konrad Maurer, by a mod. term, calls 'die entstehung des Isländischen staates.' So also of the laws of king Hakon the Good (cp. the remarks s. v. þing), lagasetning Hákonar konungs, ... hann (the king) var maðr stórvitr, ok lagði mikinn hug á lagasetning, hann 'setti' Guðalings-lög ..., Hkr. i. 135 (cp. Fms. i. 31); again, in Ó. H. 227 it answers to the mod. word legislation (of the laws of Sweyn, the son of Alfiðr), and so Orkn. 24. It is to be borne in mind that 'lög' has a double sense, viz. law in a strict sense, and in a local-political sense = a 'law-community,' legally constituted state, nearly answering to Gr. πόλις.

lang-viðri, n., add,—langviðrum skal eyða grund, Mk. 24; cp. Ísland eyðist af langviðrum ok lagaleysi, Ísl. þjóðs. i. 438.

laus-lyndi, add—fem. in Fas. ii. 124.

laus-mœll, add—the sing. occurs in Fb. iii. 185.

laus-yrði, add,—fem. in Pr. 133, Fbr. 64 new Ed.

laus, f., add,—this word occurs in Landn. 197 (Hjaltedzla-laut).

lân, n., add,—ekki er lân lengr en léd er, Vidal., a saying.

lœdda, u, f. a lead, plumb, a fisher's term in western Iceland.

leidd-angr, m. a levy; add,—may not this word be qs. leiddangr = the field of the Leet, where a Leet was held? if so, it would throw light on the origin of this meeting in very remote times as being a muster-meeting or levy of the king's service; afterwards leiddangr might have come to mean the levy itself. It is indeed difficult to explain this word in any other way, esp. the latter part -angr, which usually denotes a place.

leiddanligr, adj. ductile, manageable, Post.

leiði-þirr, m. a leader, Haustl.; wrongly explained by Egilsson, it is evidently the A. S. lād-þeow = a leader, guide.

leikni, f. playfulness, curiosity; göra e-ð til leiknis, Ísl. þjóðs. i. 615.

leittia-maðr = leystimaðr (or hleystimaðr), a viator, Post. 34.

liðr, observe,—the passage in Hm., svá at hún lyki þik liðum, is perhaps illustrated by Chaucer's 'loosen in every lith,' Nonne's Priest's Tale; embraces of witches being believed to rob a man of his manhood.

limpa, u, f. limpness, weakness, Fél. xv; það er limpa í mér, (mod.)

lík-brá, f. = valbrá (q. v.), Fél.

lím-stökkinn, part. out of joint, Þiðr. 16.

Ljósa-vatn, n. the light-water, a local name: Ljósveitningar, m. pl. the men of L., Landn.

Ljósa-kor, n., prop. a 'light-vessel,' a lamp (not lantern), cp. Mar. 679, 1036, 1037, Thom. 483.

ljúga, the verb, add,—pret. pl. lúgo, Post. 231; later lugu.

loda, the verb, the Clem. 24 (Post. Unger 63), read,—fundu þeir, at hann lóddi 'saman' flærd einni; the passage is therefore quite plain.

logn-alda, u, f. rolling in a calm, of a ship.

lok, n., add,—the word remains in Engl. dem-lock.

Loki, the name of the terrible fire-demon, half god, half giant, the friend and companion of the gods, and yet their most fearful foe. We have a new suggestion to make as to the origin of this name. The old Northern Loki and the old Italic Vulcanus are, we believe, identical: as thus,—the old Teutonic form of Loki, we suppose, was Wlōka, whence, by dropping the w before l, according to the rules of the Scandinavian tongue, Loki. A complete analogy is presented in Lat. volus, vulus, A. S. wlōts, but Icel. lit (in and-lit, a face); and, in point of the character of the two demons, the resemblance is no less striking, as we have on the one hand Vulcanus with Etna for his workshop (cp. the mod. volcano), and on the other hand the Northern legends of the fettered giant, Loki, by whose struggles the earthquakes are caused. Of all the personages of the Northern heathen religion, the three, Óðinn, Þor, and Loki, were by far the most prominent; but not even the name of Loki is preserved in the records of any other Teutonic people. Can the words of Caesar B. G. vi. xxi, Solem 'Vulcanum' et Lunam, refer to our Loki? probably not, although in Caesar's time the form would have been Wlōkan in acc., a form which a Roman ear might well have identified with their own Vulcanus. The old derivation from loka, n. sbst., is inadmissible in the present state of philological science: a Widm from vaða, or Loki from loka, is no better than a 'Juno a juvando,' or a 'Neptunus a nando.' May not Loki (Wlōka) be a relation to the Sansk. vrīka, Slav. vluku, Lith. vilkas, Icel. vargr, úlfr, meaning a destroyer, a wolf? it is very significant that in the Norse mythology Loki is the father of the world-destroying monsters,—the wolf Fenrir, the World-serpent, and the ogress Hel; and, if the etymology suggested be true, he was himself originally represented as a wolf.

lopt-hæna, u, f. a female fr. name, Landn.; prop. a kind of duel, cp. skálp-hæna (in the Addenda).

lókr, add,—that it originally was a law term, a receiver of stolen goods, is seen from Chaucer (Coke's Tale, 51), 'there is no thief without a loak.'

lund-lag, n. temper.

lund-lagt, part. n. minded, disposed, c-m er e-t l., Post. 481, 633.

lyf-steinn, in the vellum of Korm. S. (A. M. 232) it is always spelt with y (not lišteinn), thus Unger, who has himself consulted the vellum.

lykt, f. [Dan. løjte], a lantern, Bs. ii. 257.

lýð-skyldi, add—fem. in Fms. x. 339 (sjá hlýðskyldi); but hlýðskyldis, 398.

lýan, the verb, II. 3. 7, lýsa e-u yfir, better is lýsa yfir e-u.

læri-veinn, this word is a translation of A. S. leorning-cniht, a word used in Ælfric's English at the time when Christianity was transported from England to Norway and Iceland; at a still earlier time the English rendered 'discipulus' by 'þegn' (Gregory's Pastoral Care).

lœð, f. a laibe, add—the old form was prob. lauð, with a diphthong; the mod. form is lœð, gen. lœðar.

mal, n. the purring of a cat, Snót 132.

man, a bondman, add,—mans-fólk, captive-folk, prisoners; in Orkn. 368 (Fb. ii. 486, l. 8), þeir seldu þeim silfr ok 'aunat fé' is corrupted for 'mans-fólk,' as is seen from the words of the Danish translation of 1615—'ok solde dennem fangerne.'

mann-bikkja, u, f. a 'man-bitch,' a term of abuse, Post. 151.

manni, add,—þætta ek við manni, Post. 230.

man-vélar, f. pl. love-tricks, Hbl. 20.

mat, n. an estimate; the truer form is mát (like dráp, nám, gát, &c. from drepa ...); the word was originally a Norse law term, and is not found in the Grág., but was, at the union with Norway, adopted in Icel., where it soon lost its long vowel; it is actually spelt maat (i. e. mát) in D. N. ii. 225 (maats menn = taxation); eptir sex manna máti, Ib.; eptir góðra manni máti, Vm.; eptir máti, id. (Mr. Jón Thorkelsson).

mat-fiskr, m. fish for food, Post.

mál-fríðr should be—a temporary peace; mod. stundar-fríðr.

maasi, a, m. a nickname, Fms., add—prop. the name of a bird; in Faroe maasi is a sea-mew; val-maasi, Víslands-maasi (= an Icelandic mew), fiski-maasi, see Mr. H. C. Müller's Færöernes Fugle-fauna (1863).

meðan, add,—hence Dan. men = but, contracted from medan.

megin-byri, n. a fair wind, Post. 233.

mél-fluga, u, f. a moth in clothes, (mod.)

mest-megn, adv. for the most part, (mod.)

met, n. sing. = mát, an estimate, D. N. ii. 31; lög-m., Mar. (pref. p. xxv).

meta, the verb, at the beginning, observe,—the subj. metu occurs in Vols. S. 85 (Bugge's Ed.)

mey-nunna, u, f. a nun, = virgo monacha, Vitae Patrum (Unger).

mið-seymi, n., sounded misseymi, the gut used in shoe-making.

mikill, add the saying.—mikið skal til mikils vinna, Vidal. ii. 64.
mikla, ad, add.—hann kvæðsk eigi mundu mikla tillögu við hann ór því er hann hafði til unnt, Band. (MS., begin.); the printed text is corrupt.

mis-gáningr, m. an inadvertency.
mis-grip, n. a 'mis-grip,' mistake; in the phrase, taka e-t í misgripum, to take a thing by the wrong end, make a mistake, (mod.) mis-klíð, f. discord.
mjalli, a, m. [mjöll], whiteness; esp. in the phrase, vera ekki með öllum mjalla, to be not 'in one's whole whiteness,' i.e. to be not in one's senses, to be insane. móða, u, f. II, add.—af allri móðu bitra munugða, Post. 555.
mót, a meeting; dele the word 'móts-minni,' which is only a false reading of m for ni, see njóts-minni below.
mun-hugð=munuð (q. v.), Post. (Unger) 117.
munu, the verb, add.—muni in exclamations of wonder, contempt; hvat moni hvelpr á ráða gríðum? Mork. 80; hvat muni of vinna órum ástum, what should overcome our love? i.e. come what may, it is proof against all, Korm. (in a verse).
mystr=myrkr (?), Mar. 1031.
mygja, the verb, add.—an older pret. mugði or mögði; hence, né mogðu menn ölteiti, nor did the people quell their cheer, i.e. they were in high spirits, þd. (and not as explained in Lex. Poët.); at hann mygði (subj.) allri mekt Gyðinga, that he quelled all the might of the Jews, Post. (Unger) 104.
myr-dæla, u, f. 'mire-dale,' a miry, boggy hollow, Hallgr.
moerr, f.=myrr, a moor, bog; þa kámu í mörum fróskr, Mkv. mögðir, m. a kind of stone, Edda ii. 494.
móani, a, m. the name of a bear, Edda (Gl.)
-na, add.—satt-na, Bs. i. 469, v. l. nagl-hald, n. a nail's hold, Bs. ii. 503.
naumr, add.—naum gríð, Bs. ii. 508 (17th century); vera naumt við kominn, to be pressed for time.
nár, B, add.—ná-bönd, n. pl. the cords by which the shroud is bound round the body, Mar.
nef-lauss, adj. [nefi], 'kinless,' orphaned, desolate; sagt er frá hve neflauss narir, Mkv. nekkverr, add.—Mr. Uppström, and since Bugge, derive this word from ne-veit-hverr, instead of Grimm's ne-hverr, cp. A. S. nátwæt=newit-wæt=icel. nakkvat; this would better account for the double k, but otherwise it has no influence on the inflexive changes of the word.
B. nekkverr. In B. IV. 3, nekkor should be put under a separate head as loc. adverb,=somewhere, anywhere, qs. ne-hvar or ne-veit-hvar.
nema, the verb, add.—a pret. numdi in mod. usage, formed from the part. numinn, as if from a verb nymja; örvadist geð á allan hátt er eg numdi sjónum | födur-landið heldr hátt hafit upp úr sjónum, Eggert.
Nes-konungr, a pr. name, Baut. 402. nott-leikr, m. neatness, (mod.)
njótr, m., add.—njóts-minni, n. [still in Norway called njos-minne, Ivar Aasen, in the new Edition of his Diet., of a cup drunk by customers after striking a bargain];—a kind of 'earnest-cup'; sendi hann honum eina skál fulla mjadar, ok bað hann drekka njótsminni (mótsminni is an error), hér með, segir konungur, vil ek gefa þér, Sveinn, jarlsnafn, etc., Fms. vi. 52; the suggestion at the end of the article is therefore true.
Noregr, add.—'Nurriag' on the Jellinge stone.
nótt, f., C, add.—noetr-góltr, n. a roving about by night.
ný-lýsi, n., to the passage Orkn. 430 add.—According to the Saga and an entry in the old Annals the day in question was the evening of the 21st of Dec. 1154, old style; and from information given by Mr. Main (the Radcliffe Observer, Oxford), a full moon fell on this very day in that year, old style. This quite settles the question as to the true old sense of ný and nýlýsi. The chronology of Torfæus in the old Ed. of Orkn. S. is altogether wrong.
nýting, f. a term of husbandry; góð, ill nýting, of getting in the hay or crop, Esp. 1761.
nøðingr, m. a chilly blast,=gnæðingr, (mod.)
nær-selt, n. adj. as adv. nearly, almost, (mod.)
nökkor, adv., qs. ne-hvar or ne-veit-hvar, somewhere, very freq. in old writers, somewhere, anywhere; to this word belong the references under nekkverr, B. IV. 3, p. 452; to which add,—hér nokkur, Fb. i. 73; nökkur lands eða lagar, Al. 107. In mod. usage this word has become obsolete and is replaced by einhver-staðar; the explanation given under nekkverr, B. IV. 3, must be altered accordingly, and the words 'somewhat, may be' struck out.
nökkvi, a, m.; in the phrase, pungt sem 'nökkvi' or nökkva-pungt, of things like hay soaked with water or the like. This word can hardly be related to nökkvi, a boat; we think it is qs. n-ökkvi, cp. ökkr and okvast, 'pungt sem einn ökvi' rapidly pronounced sem 'nokvi, the n being taken from the preceding word, as in njóli (jóll, p. 326, col. 2).

obbeldi=ofbeldi, Thom. 405. ofan, adv.; instead of 'in þiðr. S. often spelt oman,' read 'the mod. Faroese dialect has oman.'
of-gloppr, m. a crime, Art. 20.

of-vægi, n. an enormity, an enormous weight.
opt, add.—with the notion of ever; árliga verða skyli maðr opt fá, Hm.; so opt, ósjaldan, Vsp.
orð, n., add the phrase,—fá sér e-ð til orða, to notice, to resent; eg vil ekki fá mér það til orða, Vidal. ii. 41; among compds, add,—orð-syndni, f. facetiousness: orð-heppinn, adj. biting: orð-hof, n. the word-sanctuary, i.e. the mouth, Stor.: orð-lagðr, part. famous: orð-lengja, d, to dilate upon; eg vil ekki o. þetta, I will cut it short: orð-roysr, m. the word-reed, i.e. the tongue, Sighvat: orð-ræmðr, part. notorious: orð-stafir, m. pl. 'word-slaves,' phrases, Am. 9: orð-svif, n. pl. rumours, Post. 93. ostr—the etymology of ostr, qs. jostr, is confirmed by the borrowed Finnish juusto, see Dr. W. Thomsen, p. 66.
óðal, instead of B. II. 3, read,—In the old Norse there is a compd alda-óðal, a property of ages or held for ages or generations, Lat. fundus avitus, an ancient allodial inheritance; ok ef eigi er leyst innan þriggja vetra, þá verður sú jörð honum at alda óðali, and if it be not released within three years, then the estate becomes his allodial property, D. N. i. 129; til æfulegrar eignar ok alda óðals, for everlasting possession and allodial tenure, iii. 88: then this phrase became metaphorical, in the phrase, at alda óðli, to everlasting possession, i.e. for ever; Jóann piestr skal vera þar meðan hann vill ok fylgja því at alda eyðli, i. 266; hverr verður þykki at taka þann úmagá at alda óðli, to maintain him (the poor man) for ever, Grág. i. 264; or of past time, frá alda óðli, from time immemorial; varla hefir því líkt heyrzt frá alda óðli, Vidal. ii. 181; whence the mod. Dan. fró 'arilds' tid (by corrupt pronunciation = frá 'ald-odels' tid, ld being changed into r). We believe the mid. Lat. all-odium to be derived from this compd, by way of assimilation; the old Teut. form would be alp-odal (Goth. alp- = ævum), whence all-odal, allodium, property held in absolute possession, opposed to such as is held in fee or subject to certain conditions. The remarks under óðal, l. 7, 'from this word, etc.' should be modified accordingly.

runna, ad, to confound, add the reference given s. v. ráði above wrongly explained in Rafn 165.

rúða, u. f. a pane of glass, (mod.)
rælastr, dep., in svá mælið Heilagur Andi fyrir munni Davíð konungs, begömliða 'rælið' margr maðrinn, Post. (Unger) 425, should, we believe, be 'ræsið', i. e. hæsið, to vaunt, puff oneself up, see Ps. xxxix. 6. rödd, f., add.—acc. roddo, as if from radda, Mork. 138.
rökkr, m. = rokk, a-jerkin, Thom. 457. rökkn, f. the band, Edda (Gl.), a ṛ. l. 47., a Slavonic word, Russ. ruka. röst, a mile, add.—by Captain Gerhard Munthe's military map of Norway of A.D. 1827, the distance from Christiania to Eidsvold is about eight geographical miles.
Sagn, add the reference to B. 2.—hálf-sögð er saga hver er aðrir einir segja, i. e. 'audiatur et altera pars,' Bs. i. 582, (mod., það er ekki nema hálf-sögð saga ef einn segir.)

sand-flúðir, f. pl., see flúð. sand-yrja, u. f. a quicksand, Safn i. 78.
sannr, adj. sooth, add.—Lat. -sonus, -sonis, is the same word; the old Norse law term, sannr at sök, or ú-sannr, eigi sannr at sök, exactly answers to the Lat. law term 'in-sonus,' thus Lat. injurias insons is literally rendered in Icel. by 'ú-sannr at sök.'
satt-na = satt, true, Bs. i. 469, v. l. sár = sá, demonstr. pron., is of frequent occurrence on Runic stones, e. g. sár eigi flo, he flew not; sár vanu Nurviag at kristnu, he won Norway to Christianity; this 'sár' is simply a nominative case formed like öngur, margr, from einugi, manugi.

seyra, u. f., add.—sopa-seyra, a sip of the dregs, Jón Þorl. signa, to sink, add.—Post. 5. singr, n., add.—Benedikt kom og braut sitt far, búðar-vos hann átti þar og sultar singr, . . . ekkert hann að landi bar nema frosnar singr, a ditty, Grönd.

sjá, the verb, l. 3, add.—pl. só, Clem.
sjá, the pronoun, see sá, sú. This word or form might have been put under a separate head, it is often used in a pointedly demonstr. sense, like þessi; see the references s. v. sá. sjónhverfis-hringr, m. = sjóndeildar-hringr, Vidal. i. 206.

skakkk-ylgðr, part. threatening, of the waves, Egilsson's Poems.
skalli, a. m., add.—skalli, kom þú á morgin, Post. 250.
skapt-hár, observe,—we suspect that in the phrase 'skapthá sól,' of the sun just after sunrise, is concealed another sense; it is not 'spear-high,' but akin to A. S. seafst-mond = half a foot, or six inches, meaning the moment when the sun has got just half a foot above the hills; the definition given by the ancients themselves in K. þ. K. 96 is artificial and can hardly be etymologically true; the word was perhaps borrowed from the A. S., and so the old Icelanders themselves did not quite understand it; cp. the phrase, ganga skapta-muninn, to walk just half a pace, Lv. 35 (see skapt l. 2. at the end).
skata, u. f., add the saying,—þegir barnið meðan það étr skötu-fötinn.

lashing the sea before a gale; the metaphor is from the game of skinn-leikr, Isl. Þjóða. ii. 129.
skjall-hvitr, adj. white as skjall, q. v. skjart-sýnn, adj. quick-eyed, Post. 636, v. l.
skjár, m., observe,—skjár is prop. the bladder stretched on frames and used for glass, as still used in Norway, thus skjara-lykna = a lantern of bladder, opp. to a glass-lantern; in Icel. the word has since come to mean the window or opening; whilst the bladder itself is called líkna-belgr.
skjól-stæðingr, m. a client, (mod.)
skol-brúnn, the best Engl. rendering would be olive, of complexion. skonnorta, u. f. a schooner, (mod.)
skrud-grönn, adj. bright-green, of the grass in the early spring. skukka, II, add.—skukkum ok brukkum, Thom. 355. skukktótt, adj. winkled, in folds, Thom. 355. skulka, ad. to mock; = skelka, Post. 119, v. l. skúr, a shower, add.—Runolf, a native of northern Icel., in Grimm's Island., has it masc.; so in later times the poet B. Gröndal, a native of Mývatn, sól og myrka skúra (acc. pl.), in a ditty of 1790.

stlg-völ, n. a stirrup, Thom. 420. stíman, n. a hard tussel, Post. 584. stjarna, at the end, i.—the names in the old lay Sdm. 15 and beginning of 16 are, we believe, astronomical,—the 'Ear of Árvak,' the 'Hoof of Alsvinn' (the Sun Horses), the 'Wheel under the Chariot of Rungnir,' the 'Teeth (or Reins) of Sleipnir,' the 'Sledge Harness,' the 'Bear's Paw,' the 'Tongue of Briag,' the 'Wolf's Claws,' the 'Eagle's Nose,' and perhaps others. The Cod. Reg. l. c. reads 'Rungnir,' the Völ. S. 'Rögen,' i. e. Odin, for Hrungnir the giant would here be out of question, see Bugge's foot-note to l. c. straum-mikill, adj. running with great current, Orkn. (Lex. Rm.)
strúpi, a. m., better form than strjúpi (q. v.), mjólk hljóp ór stríp anum, Post. (Unger) 213.

svorfa, the verb, add the phrase.—sultur sverfr að, hunger pressed hard.
svíkja, the verb, add.—hann siku (i. e. sviku) Blaku-menn í öttara, . . . Guð svíkja þá er hann sviku, Bant. (Broem. 179).
Svöldr, f. a local name of a current (not an island) near Hiddense (Héðins-ey), west of Rügen; prob. a rendering of a Wendish name, the Swelchie, whirlpool (?); fyrir Svöldar minni, before the mouth of S.; and 'fyrir Svöld,' Edda 83, also Knytt. S. ch. 120, 122; see the conclusive essay on the place and date of this battle by Mr. Jørgensen, in Aarb. for Nord. Oldk. og Hist. 1869; to which add, that 'Héðins-ey' actually occurs, although disguised, in Hallfred's poems, composed immediately after the battle, viz. 'á víðu sundi Héðins-eyjar' for 'Héðins-meyjar' of the MSS.; and breiðan bekk Héðins 'rekka' of the same poem (Fs. 218, 219, verses 12, 15, being a local name, not a kenning). syldr = silfr, cp. Dan. sølv, Post. 569.

 tjalda, the verb, add.—að tjalda til einnar nætr, to pitch the tent for a single night, of shifty, changeable human things which stand to-day and to-morrow are swept away, a common saying in Icel. (even as in Arabic, see Mr. Littre's Inaugural Address to the French Academy); and, það verðr að tjalda því sem til er, one must use the hangings one has, i. e. one must make the best of it. In the former case the metaphor is taken from the pitching a tent, in the latter from the dressing the hall (or church) on festive occasions.
 tolla, the verb,—for a suggestion as to its origin see þola II; we now believe this to be the real origin of the word.
 tólf-faldr, adj. twelvefold, Post. 513.

 vatn-þrunginn, adj. dropical, Thom. 500.
 veiklast, adv. to grow weak or faint.
 veiz = viz, see viðr; veiz eptir skyldu, quite in order, Thom. 393.
 ver-búðir, f. pl. sheds or booths in which fishermen live, Eggert ltn. ver-gangr = verðgangr, Boll. 350. veir-grænn, adj. 'winter-green,' ever-green (cp. Dan. vintergrønt), Rkv.

víða, the verb, l. 1, —'ving' in the ditty of Grett. is, we believe, qs. 'ving,' from the obsolete vringa, = to wring, from which vringu, q. v. vnd-högg, n. a stroke in the wind or a stroke aslant; in the phrase, hann slær ekki vindhögginn, of a steady worker who never loses a minute.

 vllun, f. bowling, Post. 426.
 þínku-leyzi, n. thoughtlessness, stupidity; þrysvar hann drakk í nuku-leyzi, Egilsson's Poems.
 þíða, u, f. a thaw, mild weather; á þorranum voru hér svo miklar þíður, að grasið fór að spretta kringum bæi, en það fékk fljótan enda á Góunni, a letter from western Icel. of March 11, 1873; cp. valt er 'þorra þíð-vindi,' Hallgr.
 þokkr, m. a mood, add.—væri betr at ek þegða þokks, þat hefir hverr er verðr er loks, I had better not speak my mind, Mkx. þrá-rækr, adj. persevering, Post. (Unger) 434.
 þrymr, m., add.—in the old lay, Em. 2, for hvat þrymr þar, we read, hvat þrym (dat.) er þar, what din is there? The lost vellum, we suppose, had 'hvat þrym' þar, where ' might be the inflexive -r, but was meant to be the personal verb 'er,' often written in this abbreviated form above the line; þruma or þrymja, = to more, is never found in old prose writers or poets; the conclusive reason is that the true idiomatic construction in this case is 'hvat' with a dative, and not with a verb (cp. hvat er þat hlym hlymja, Skm.)
 þunn-vombi, n. [vomb], the abdomen, Hem. (MS.)
 þursa-stafr, m., see þurs,—the notion of the magical Rune is preserved in the phrase, rista e-m þursa-staf, to libel a person in a coarse, brutal manner; það var mesta ofdirfið af ótilkjörnu flóði, | að rista þenna þursa staf þorlaks-syni Jóni, Grönd.
 þustr, m. [Lat. fustis], a flail; með hörðum þust, Post. 562.
 þvengr, m., add the following curious reference,—Hjörleifr konungr var upp festur í konungs höll með skó-þvengjum sínum sjálfs millum elda tveggja . . . Á meðan vakti Hildir ok Jós mungáti í elduna, ok kvæð 'Hjörleifr þat verra,' hón leysti hann svá at hón hjó með sverði skó-þvengina (thus, we believe, to be emended for 'ok kvæð Hjörleifr þar vera,' etc., of the vellum), king H. was bung up in the king's hall by his shoe-thongs between two fires . . . In the meantime H. kept awake, and poured ale into the fires, saying that this was worse (more tantalizing) for him; she then released him by cutting the thongs with a sword, Fas. ii. 34.
 þver-höfði, a, m. a wrong-headed person.

A LIST OF BRITISH RIVERS,

About a hundred in number, contained in old Icelandic alliterative memorial verses (inscribed á-heiti, i. e. names of rivers) from MSS. of the Snorra-Edda (ii. 479, 480, of the 13th century; the verses themselves may well be of the 12th century). Most of these rivers seem to belong to the northern Scottish counties, Caithness, Ross, Moray, Sutherland, and to the north-east of England. As specimens of an attempt at identification we add about thirty names, half for Scotland and half for England, leaving the rest open. In Scotland, Örrmt, Armet W.; Sekin, Shin R.; Dyrrn, Durn W.; Mein, Mein W.; Skialg, Shallag W.; Nis, Ness R.; Ekla or Ekkjall, Oykill R.; Spæ, Spey R.; Nid, Nith R.; Þöll, Thuil R.; Dyna, Dun R.; Njörn, Nairn R.; Bro, Brora R.; Maura, Strath More; Apardion, Aberdeen (here used of the river). A few (ten or twelve) of the rivers in the verses are of other countries, being probably added for alliteration sake, e. g. Jordan, Tiber, Euphrates, Albis, Loire; these we have omitted. Some of these names also occur in old lays (Gm., Bm., Gs., Hkv.), and this list may thus afford a hint as to the age of these poems.

Ramus Celtique
Tom 3. 1876-8

GAELIC NAMES AND NICKNAMES

Contained in the Landnåma-bók (Icelandic Book of Settlement); those in the Orkn. and the Njåla are left out, as being already well known. The translation and identification we leave to Celtic scholars, only noticing that these names, as well as those of the rivers above, were taken from oral tradition, not from books; the Norse form may therefore throw some light on the Celtic pronunciation of the 10th to the 12th centuries.
